Norway is composed of a series of elevated and barren table lands, called Fjelds or Fjelds, which extend along the W shore from the North Cape on the N, to the Nahe on the S, with an average breadth of about 60 m, to the parallel of Trondhjem, and thence expanding on the S to about 200 m in breadth. The mountains of Norway do not form a continuous chain or ridge, as usually represented, but, especially in the S, a series of broad plateaux, separated occasionally by deep and narrow valleys. The most characteristic of these table lands is the Dovre field, 3 000 feet in elevation, on which rises the mountain of Snechtatten, 7,620 feet above the sea. The culminating point of the southern or broadest portion is 8,500 feet above the sea, in lat 61° 30' N. In the N or narrower portion the Kiolen mountains assume more the form of a ridge, the highest point is Snihelma, 6,200 feet above the sea, in lat 67° 30' N. The W and N parts of the peninsula descend abruptly towards the N, while, on the other side, the mountains slope gently to the S. E. Skarveelstinden, on the limits of the Sogne and Guldbrandsdal, is 8,670 feet, Lodal's Kaiblen, in the Sogne Field, 6,673 feet, Gausta Field, in Tollermarken, 6,189 feet, Folgefonden glacier, on the border of the stift Bergen, 6,200 feet. Scarcely one half the surface is under 2 000 feet absolute height and it is calculated that the proportion of arable land to the whole extent is not more than 1 to 10. The only plains are those formed by the table lands between the stifts Agderhus and Bergen, which extend from 60 to 80 m in length, and have an elevation of 4 600 to 4,620 feet. The mountains contain rich minerals, but, from the difficulty of transport and the want of fuel, mining industry is but little developed. The only mines in operation are those of silver, copper, iron, cobalt, and chrome. The chief product is iron, the mines of which are situated mostly in the Gulf of Christiansia. The silver mine of Kongsberg is at present one of the richest in Europe, and next to the copper mine of Roraa the most important in the kingdom. The principal valleys are confined to the F side of the peninsula, the longest is the Osterdal, watered by the Glommen, which, with its continuation the Solo and Oudal, is 215 m in length. The next in extent, and the most fertile, is the Guldbrandsdal watered by the Tan-gen. Narrow belts between the coasts and the commencement of the plateaux, are the only low lands in Norway, the most extensive of these surrounds the Gulf of Trondhjem. The W shores are penetrated by an immense number of gulfs or fjords, which occasionally extend deep into the table lands. The chief of these are—from S to N, the Bukkefjord, Hardanger, Trondhjem, Sultens, Ofodn, Forsang, and Vaaag fords. The most extensive gulf on the S coast is that of Christiansia. Numerous peninsulas separate the fjords, among the most remarkable of which are Cape Nord-Kyn on the N, and Cape Stadt on the W coast. Some of the fjords form excellent harbours, but the immense number of mountainous islands and rocky islets which border the coast render access difficult. The largest of these archipelagoes are the Lofoden isls, separated from the continent by the Vest fjord, and further N the isls of Mageroe, Soroe, Rmgvaloe, Hvaloe, and Bergen. Between these island groups and the continent there is a wide passage for coasting vessels. A great part of the E side of Norway is covered with lakes, said to number 30 000 in all, which, however, are generally of small extent. Many of them are situated at great elevations in the table land, among these the Rygdunsee, 15 to 20 m long, is 3,490 feet above the sea. The lakes abound in fish. The river systems of Norway are of the utmost importance in the economy of the country, the smaller streams are employed in driving the machinery of mines, corn and saw mills, and in floating timber to the larger rivers, these serve also as the chief means of communication in winter, when they are covered with strong ice. The largest rivers are on the E slope of the plateau, flowing S to the Skagerack, these are the Glommen, Lougen, Femund, Laaven, Bema, the Namsen, and Tana. Ships enter the mouths of some of these rivers for 5 or 10 m, but none of them are navigable on account of numerous waterfalls (for), which all of them form. Of these the more celebrated are the burpenfos on the Glommen, near Fiedrikstad, and the Hukaufos, in the dist Telemarken, which falls 613 feet perpendicular. Voringsfos, in the dist Hardanger, has a perpendicular fall of 870 to 930 feet.

Scandinavia, from its vicinity to the sea, has a remarkably mild climate, considering its northern position. The snow line is much higher than in corresponding latitudes in other countries, in lat 61° it is 5,300 feet and in lat 70° 3,480 feet above the sea. In Siberia the cultivation of grain ceases at lat 60°, while in Norway it extends to lat 70° N. The mean annual temperature at the level of the sea is, at North Cape, 32°, Trondhjem (lat 63° 30') 40°, Ellensvang in Hardanger fjord (lat 60° 45'), Christiansia (lat 59° 54') 41°, Fahl. The sea never freezes, even at North Cape but the shallow water of the Skagerack is occasionally frozen in winter, about 1 8th part of the surface is covered with perpetual snow, and vast glaciers descend from the table lands. The year is nearly divided between winter and summer. Spring is almost unknown, and the autumn is cold and rigorous, snow covers the ground from the beginning of November till the end of March. In January and February the temperature is usually from 14° to 18°, and often as low as 2 Fahr. Summer lasts from May to September, during which the temperature is often as high as 108° Fahr. In the month of March the surface is strewed with ashes, earth, or sand, by which means the snow is melted, and from this process, combined with the great heat and the length of the day 8 to 12 weeks are sometimes sufficient for sowing, ripening, and reaping the crops in the interior. The climate of the W coast, though milder than that of the S or the interior, is deteriorated by excessive humidity, the W wind, blowing over the Atlantic, carries moisture, which is intercepted by the mountains, and precipitated in the form of rain, to the amount of 70 or 80 inches annually, while the E wind brings extreme drought. The vegetation of Norway varies according to climate and position. Among trees the pine tribe is the most numerous. The fir, which is found in lat. 60° 20', at an elevation of 4,000 feet, and the pine (pinus sylvestris) form vast and valuable forests in Agderhus, Christiansand, and Trondhjem. The forests of fir extend N to the Polar circle, and those of pine beyond it. The oak forms fine forests in the amt Jarlaberg and Laurvig, and especially in Christiansand. The birch attains the highest northern latitude in lat 70° it grows at an elevation of 1,680 feet above the sea. Fruit trees are not indigenous in Norway, although the wild apple is common in the lower regions, and the cherry is widely distributed Flowers are successfully cultivated in the gardens of the S. and W. The principal grain of Norway is barley; the other cerealia are cultivated only in favoured spots in the S. Barley attains the highest northern latitude, and the greatest elevation: in lat. 59° 26' it is grown at a height of 3,938 feet; the extreme limit of its culture is lat. 70°; but there it only ripens at an elevation of 66 to 100 feet; its profitable culture is confined to a narrow belt of coast land, and to the agricultural colonies of Mølselv and Barodal, in Nordland. The corn raised is insufficient for home consumption. The potato has of late been extensively cultivated. The rearing of cattle is the chief occupation of the population of the mountainous districts, who, like the Swiss, leave the villa, and spend the summer with their flocks and herds in the upper valleys. From the simple habits of the population, and the excellent climate, the value of life is understood to be high in Norway, except at Bergen, which is unhealthy, and where leprosy is prevalent. The horses, a small but hardy breed, are extensively exported to Sweden, England, and Scotland. Sheep are of an inferior breed, and yield coarse wool. In the N. the reindeer is the only resource of the Laplander. The most destructive wild animals are the brown bear, wolf, and lynx; these, with the fox and others, are hunted for their skins. The eagle is so destructive to sheep and lambs, that a private company is established for its extirpation. Game of all kinds is abundant, and there are no game-laws. The chief objects of the chase are the deer, elk, reindeer, and hare; the seal, which abounds on all the coasts, the fish-otter; and, among birds, the grouse, and the capercaillie. The coast literally swarms with sea fowl: the wild goose and elder duck are numerous; the swan appears on the S. coast in winter, and ducks of various kinds abound on the coasts, and in the lakes and rivers. In the small uninhabited isles off the N. coast, vast numbers of the eggs of sea fowl are procured. Fishing forms the most important branch of industry. Whales are occasionally taken on the coast of Finnmark; salmon abound in the gulfs and rivers; there are extensive beds of oysters on all the shores, and the pearl oyster is found in many of the rivers.

There are few manufactures in Norway. Brandy distilleries and saw-mills are the only extensive branches of industry; next to these are forges and metal foundries, the produce of which is exported in a raw state, except what is used in the manufacture of arms at Kongsberg, and in the manufs. of iron wire and nails. The manufs. of cloth, linen, and cotton, as well as the preparation of skins and leather, are almost entirely domestic. The other manufs. comprise those of glass, paper, oil, gunpowder, soap, tobacco, and sugar refining. Owing to the difficulty of transport, all the seats of industry, and the only towns, are on the coast, and chiefly on the Gulf of Christiania. Ship-building is actively carried on in the ports. In the middle ages, the commerce of Norway consisted exclusively in the exportation of fish, and this is still the most important article of trade. Next to this is the export of timber, which was commenced by the Dutch in the 16th century; and, lastly, the products of the mines and metal forges. The principal forests are in the interior; the timber is felled in autumn and winter, and is conveyed over the snow to the coast. Fish is exported from all the towns on the W. coast, but Bergen is the chief entrepôt. The most important branches of this trade are dried fish and salted herrings. The principal mineral exports are iron, copper, and silver. The chief imports are salt, grain, and colonial produce. Commerce in the interior of the country is greatly impeded for want of means of communication; none of the rivers are navigable except near their mouths. There are good roads between the towns of the S. coast, and a railway is (1865) in progress from Christiania to Lake Mjøsen; but the usual communication is by sea. Among the numerous islands on the W. coast, there are violent and irregular currents, which render the coast navigation dangerous. Among these is the celebrated Malström or Moskenes-Strom, the danger from which has, however, been greatly exaggerated. Regular communications have successively been established between the principal towns of the coast, from Christiania to Hammerfest, and steam vessels ply in the Gulf of Christiania, and on the Lakes of Mjøsen and Tyrifjord. Norway has a national discount bank and a mint.

Nearly the whole pop. of the kingdom are Northmen or Normans, with about 13,000 Fins or Lapps, who are of the Mongolian race. The chief occupation is agriculture and cattle-rearing. Silver, copper, and iron mining are carried on in 23 mining establishments. The Fins and Lapps live on the products of their reindeer; and the inhabitants of the coast on fishing. The Norwegian or Norsk, is one of the Teutonic or German languages, and is nearly allied to the Swedish and Danish. The constitution of Eldvold, modified by the Storting or National Assembly, is the fundamental law of the kingdom: its principal conditions are—that Norway is a free, independent, and indivisible state, only united under the same sovereign with Sweden. The freedom of the press is guaranteed. Lutheranism is the state religion, in which Lutherans are obliged to train their children. Other religions are tolerated, except Jews, Jesuits, and monks, who are excluded. The government is a constitutional monarchy. The kingdom is divided into five stifts, each of which has a bishop, and 340 parishes, to each of which a preacher is appointed. For administrative purposes it is divided into 19 amts. There are few countries in Europe where elementary instruction is more widely spread than in Norway; every peasant can read, and many can write and cast accounts. The law forbids the marriage of any one who cannot procure a certificate of confirmation, and this is only given to those who can read. Every individual of the age of 20 not confirmed is liable to be sent to a house of correction to receive the necessary instruction. In all the towns there are elementary schools, and many have Sabbath and private schools. Most of the towns have superior burgher schools. The chief seat of learning is the University of Christiania; there is a military school at Christiania, and a school of marine at Frederickshavn. Six normal schools are supported by the state. There are excellent public libraries, museums, and scientific collections, in the different towns. The principal literary productions are periodicals. Each commune is bound to support its own poor, and mendicity is punished as a crime. The state maintains magazines of reserve for grain, which is supplied to the inhabitants on payment of a fixed amount of interest.

In 1380, Olaf IV., King of Denmark, and heir to the throne of Norway, united the crowns of the two kingdoms, and this union lasted till 1814, when Norway was ceded by the King of Denmark, and annexed to Sweden by the Allied Powers, at the treaty of Kiel, and the two crowns of Norway and Sweden were declared united on the 4th November 1814.

Nubia is situated almost entirely in the valley of the Nile, which is here so narrow as to leave no space for cultivation on its banks, and the productive districts occur in the gorges between the mountains and on the islands. A desert of sand and rocks, with some small fertile oases, extends E. from Lower Nubia to the Red Sea. In Upper Nubia the country is more varied, the Nile here receives its aff. the Atbara or Tacaze, 165 m. below the junction of the white and blue rivers; between these rivers are situated the regions of Shendi, Halfay, and Seennar, which contain vast fertile plains. The climate of Nubia is extremely hot and dry, but on the whole healthy; the plague is said never to have penetrated S. of the second cataract (lat. 22° N.). Besides the animals common to Egypt, Nubia has the giraffe, and several species of antelopes and buds, which belong to the central plateau of Africa. Agriculture employs most of the pop. on the banks of the Nile and its tributaries, and artificial irrigation is resorted to as in Egypt. Chief products dhourra, barley, cotton, indigo, tobacco, senna, coffee, and dates. Cattle, sheep, and goats are reared by the Arabs of the neighbouring deserts. Manufs. are limited to objects for domestic use. An extensive transit trade is carried on with the interior of Africa and Egypt, in slaves, gold-dust, senna, and ostrich leathers. Snakin on the Red Sea is the only port. The Nubians belong to Arabian and Ethiopian races; the pastoral tribes on the banks of the Tacaze and the Upper Nile, speak the Arabic language. Previous to the conquest of Nubia by Ibrahim Pasha in 1821, it was governed by a great number of independent chiefs; since then it has been under the dominion of Egypt.

Its see comprises the co. Oxford, and the archdeaconries of Berks and Bucks. Revenue of bishopric 5,000*l.* St Mary's church, used for academical services, has a spire of 180 feet in height. Carfax or St Martin's is the corporation church. St Peter's in the East is the oldest church in Oxford (supposed about the 9th century); its older parts are Saxon, and it has a crypt of the same architecture. St Mary Magdalen is in the decorated style. St John's, All Saints and St Giles, also deserve notice. In the city are also ten other churches. Besides the colleges, several of which, as Christchurch, New College, All Souls, Magdalen, and Queen's, boast of imposing architecture, other principal buildings are the town and co. hall, music hall, city bridewell, sessions-house, and co. gaol, the market houses, Radcliffe infirmary, house of industry, &c. 12 par., many un-houses, and chapels for Roman Catholics, Methodists, Independents, and Baptists. Oxford has diocesan and national schools, numerous charitable endowments, and several banks. It is governed, exclusive of the university, by a mayor, 9 aldermen, and 80 councillors, and is the seat of quarter and petty sessions, a mayor's court, a court of hustings, and of assizes and monthly courts for the co. Corp. rev. 4,670*l*. It sends 2 members to House of Commons for the town, reg. electors (1847) 2,881; and 2 members for the university, reg. electors 2,758. It is the place of election for members for the co.—The UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD consists of 19 colleges and 5 halls, as follows:—University college, reputed to have been founded in 872, revived in 1249; Balioi, founded between 1263 and 1268, and of which Wickliffe was once master; Merton, founded at Malden in Surrey, in 1264, and removed to Oxford in 1274; Eton, founded 1314; Oriel, dating from 1326; Queen's, founded in 1340, and the buildings of which are among the finest in the city; New college, 1382, with the most gorgeous and elegant chapel in the university; Lincoln, founded in 1427; All Souls, 1437, with a noble hall, and a library of 40,000 vols.; Magdalen, 1466, at the entrance of the city from London, with fine Gothic architecture, and a hall that has been the banqueting room of many English sovereigns; Brazen Nose, founded 1509; Corpus Christi, 1516; Christ Church, originally founded by Cardinal Wolsey in 1525, and with by far the most extensive buildings and grounds belonging to any of the colleges, a W. front 382 feet in length, a tower, containing the "Great Tom," a bell, weighing 17,000 lbs., magnificent hall, picture gallery, library, etc.; Trinity, founded 1554; St John's, 1567, with handsome buildings in the N. part of the city; Jesus, founded 1571; Wadham, 1613; Pembroke, 1620; Worcester college, 1714; and St Mary's, New Inn, St Alban, Magdalen, and St Edmund's halls, which two last are unendowed academical houses. Total members (1848) 6,020. The university is governed by its own statutes, administered by a chancellor, a resident vice-chancellor, who is magistrate for Oxford, and the co. of Oxford and Berks, two proctors, and subordinate officers. The corporate business is conducted by the house of congregation, composed of the resident doctors, heads, and professors of colleges, and the house of convocation, comprising all those whose names remain on the books of the university, whether resident or not. Public professorships are of royal or private endowment; and in all there are 28 professors and readers, some of whom lecture in the "schools," new buildings for which have been lately constructed. The fellowships and scholarships are chiefly reserved for parties who, by birth or interest, rather than learning, acquire a title to them; but at Balioi, Oriel, Lincoln, and Wadham colleges, they have been thrown open to competition. Most of the colleges have exhibitions, with stipends from public bodies elsewhere; and at Christ Church is a body of servitors, similar to the scholarship of Cambridge. The Bodleian library, connected with the university, comprised in 1800 220,000 vols., and 30,000 MSS., and is entitled to a copy of all new works published in the United Kingdom. There are besides about 23 other libraries. Total revenues of the university estimated at 457,420*l*. University College claims to have been founded by Alfred the Great.

It is certain that Oxford was a seat of learning as early as the time of Edward the Confessor. It was a principal residence of numerous Raxon, Danish, and Norman monarchs. This space is divided into two distinct portions: 1st, that comprised within the old city wall, erected for the collection of the octroi or customs; and 2d, the communes of the banlieue, comprised between the old wall and the line of the new fortifications. The 1st part, which forms the 12 municipal arronds, of the commune of Paris, is, in many parts, covered with splendid monuments, magnificent hotels and gardens. The houses are generally lofty, and built in a uniform style. The new streets are wide, straight, well paved, and lighted with gas; but many of the old streets are narrow and crooked. The Seine, which traverses Paris from E. to W., is lined with spacious quays, and planted with trees. Within the limits of the city, it is crossed by 23 bridges, and receives the small stream of Bievre or the Gobelins, and the Canal of St Martin, which joins those of the Oureq and St Denis. It here forms two islands, the Île St Louis, and the Île du Cité; on which last is situated the cathedral church of Nôtre Dame, a gothic building, in the form of a Latin cross, with a magnificent facade, terminating by two square towers 295 feet in height: the Hôtel Dieu, the Palais de Justice, and the Pont-Neuf, which latter connects the island of the city with both sides of the river. This is the largest, and one of the oldest bridges in Paris; in its centre is a bronze statue of Henri IV. The portion of Paris situated on the rt. b. of the river is the most extensive, and contains the greatest number of public offices. It is also the richest and most commercial, its centre being occupied by the bourse (Exchange of France). Among the many splendid edifices of this quarter, are the palace of the Tuileries, long the residence of the kings of France, and the scene of many of its most remarkable events; the palace of the Louvre, appropriated to rich collections of paintings, sculpture, bronzes, antiquities, and prints; the Palais National, the galleries of which are occupied by elegant shops and cafés; the palace of the Elysée Bourbonn; the Hôtel de Ville, and the Church of the Mademoiselle. The left bank of the river contains the Faubourg St Germain, the principal residence of the oldest nobles; the boulevards are here also planted, but the promenades are not frequented. On this side is the Page Latin, the seat of the principal educational establishments, as the Sor-bonne, College of France, College of St Louis, Louis-le-Grand, Henri IV, Polytechnic School, and the Normal School, inaugurated 1846; the School of Medicine, and Schools of Law. [GUY-RELLS.] A great portion of this quarter was built from quarries, extending under the river, which formed the celebrated catacombs used as a deposit for the bones found in the cemeteries at the time of their suppression. The space contained between the city wall and the fortified circle is composed of the communes of the banlieue, in which the population has greatly increased within a few years, but the greater part of it is still occupied by fields or gardens. These communes comprise on the right bank Bercy, Charonne, Belleville, La Vilette, La Chapelle, Montmartre, Les Batignolles, Passy, and Anteuil; and on the left bank Grenelle, Vaugirard, Montrouge, and Gentilly. The industrial establishments of Paris embrace all kinds of manufactures and commerce, but it is especially distinguished for objects of taste and fashion,—furniture, jewellery, trinkets, bronzes, porcelain, clocks and watches, painted paper, perfumery, bonnets, gloves, and carriages. The carpets and tapestries of the Gobelins are held in high estimation, and Paris is celebrated for its mathematical and optical instruments. It is one of the chief centres in Europe for the production of works connected with literature and the fine arts. In 1846, it had 24 daily journals, 11 advertising papers, 262 periodical sheets of journals, reviews, bulletins, and annals of politics, literature, science, arts, and fashions. The commerce of Paris is facilitated by navigation on the Seine, by its connection with many canals, and by railways to many chief towns of France. [FRANCE.] It has a chamber of commerce with a commercial library, an exchange which publishes daily returns, and it is the seat of all the principal financial, industrial, and commercial societies in the country. Among the eminent persons that Paris has produced may be mentioned the great Condé, Prince Eugène of Savoy, Rousseau the poet, Thou the historian, Molière, Boileau, Voltaire, Rollin, d'Alembert, the painters Lebrun and David, the geographer d'Anville, Lavoisier, Madame Roland, and Madame de Staël. Paris was a place of importance in the time of Cæsar; it was then confined to the island in the Seine, now called the Ile du Cité, and was cap. of that part of Gaul occupied by the Parisii. Under the Roman emperors it was greatly extended. Clovis fixed his empire here in 508. The establishment of the university, in the year 1200, gave it great importance; it was surrounded by walls under Philip Augustus; the inner or city wall (d'Ostroi) was built nearly as it now stands, in 1788. The new line of fortifications was commenced in 1840, and finished in 1848. Paris was delivered up to the English in 1420, and held by them for six years. The allied army entered it in 1814-15. The first revolution began 14th July 1789; the second 27th July 1830; and the third on 23d February 1848, and in 1851 Louis Napoleon, at that time President of the Republic, appealed to the people, and was elected Emperor by a vast majority of votes.

The S., or Chinese city, the seat of commerce, and residence of the majority of the pop., is intersected throughout by 4 wide and regular thoroughfares, which abound with shops of all descriptions, and are continually filled with a motley crowd. At the points where these streets meet each other, are large arches; but except these, and a temple to the god of agriculture, there would seem to be no edifices in this quarter deserving notice. The inner enclosure, or "forbidden city," with walls 2 m. in circumference, faced with yellow tiles, and surrounded by a moat faced with masonry, is appropriated to the public and private palaces of the emperor and empress, and has a magnificent temple of the imperial ancestors, pavilions, gardens, a lake, and an artificial mountain. Outside of both cities are open suburbs; and Peking has, besides its numerous temples and pagodas, a fine mosque, a Greek church and convent, and a Roman Catholic chapel. About 10 m. W.N.W. is an imperial park, covering at least 12 sq. m., and containing 30 palaces of the emperor and great officers of state. Peking has a large printing and book-selling trade, and manufs. of coloured glass, idols, and other articles; but its inhabitants chiefly depend for subsistence on employment connected with the court. Area estimated at 450,000 square miles. Population not more than 8,000,000.

The following are the great divisions of the country:—

Modern Names.	Ancient Names.	Chief Towns.
Azerbaïjan	Media Atropatene	Tebars

Archie	Zyandeh	Semnan
Luristan	Syria Media
Khuzestan	Susiana	Susah

the central part (Irak-Ajem), and the greater portion of Fars) is a table land. Average height from 2,500 to 3,500 feet above the sea, but traversed by mountain ranges rising to upwards of 7,000 or 8,000 feet, and bounded N. by the Elburz chain, prolonged from Azerbijan E. to the Paropamisian mountains in Afghanistan, and S. by another chain stretching from Koordistan E. to the mountains of W. Beloochistan. This table land contains in its W. part many irrigated and fertile tracts, but nearly all the E. part of Persia is a wide and irremediable salt desert, forming a portion of that feature, and sterile zone which extends from the Atlantic throughout the Sahara of Africa, Arabia, Central Asia, and Mongolia, to the mountains on the N. frontier of the Chinese empire. S. of the table land, also, in the provs. bordering on the Persian Gulf, the country is mostly parched up and barren, and the heats of summer are almost insupportable. The absence of sufficient water is one of the great disadvantages suffered in Persia. Except the Aras, forming the N.W. frontier, the Sefid-rood and Gurgun, which enter the Caspian Sea, the Kerah, Karun, Jerahi, etc., affls. of the Tigris and Shat ul-Arab in Khuzistan, and the Bundemir in Fars, the rivers are quite insignificant, and by far the greater portion of the country is arid and unproductive. Azerbijan and the Caspian provs. must however be excluded from this general description. N. of the Elburz mountains the country is covered with dense forests of oak, elm, and beech, interspersed with fine pastures, and numerous orchards and vineyards. The climate of these provs. is similar to that of Europe, the grains common in which continent, with rice, are plentifully raised. Besides grain, the principal products of Persia are cotton, tobacco, silk, gallnuts, madder, yellow berries, opium, gum-ammoniac, assafetida, and other drugs; wool, wine, rose water, saffron, dates and other fruits. Copper mines have been wrought in some of the N. provs., and lead mines in Fars and Kerman. Near Nishapoor are some famous mines of Turquoise, a gem peculiar to Persia. Rock salt is abundant in most parts of the country, and salt is also procured from the waters of Lakes Urumiyah and Bakhtegan. Coal, iron, naphtha, and galls, are other chief mineral products. Domestic animals include most of the species common in Europe, with the camel, wild ass, and argali sheep. The breeds of horses are very superior, sheep are every where abundant, and with cattle they compose the principal wealth of the wandering tribes of Moguls, Toorks, Uzbeks, and Kurds, who dwell in all the outlying provs. of the kingdom. Principal manufactures are of silk fabrics, of all kinds; in the chief cities, shawls of goat's hair, especially in Kerman, carpets, felts, cotton cloths, cutlery, and arms, glass, pottery, leather, and saddlery. Commerce extensive, notwithstanding the absence of any roads but mule-tracks. It is chiefly with the adjacent countries, with Russia, by way of the Caspian, and with British India and England by way of the Persian Gulf. Exports consist of the native products already enumerated, with copper wares, saffron, specie, skins and furs. Imports from India are indigo, chintzes, muslins, calicoes, gold and silver brocade, gun, chinaware, sugar, shawls, and metals; from Turkey, European goods and specie; from Russia, iron, broadcloth, calicoes, gold lace, and manufactured goods, tea, quicksilver, and furs; from England, woollen and cotton fabrics, shawls, jewellery, arms, cutlery, watches, and metallic wares. A large proportion of the British cottons imported at Trebizond on the Black Sea is intended for the Persian markets. Principal parts of Persia are Bushkin and Gombroon, on the Persian Gulf, and Rosell, Beldirash, and Ashtabad, on the Caspian Sea. Government despotic. The shah is assisted by a grand vizier, who exercises control over the military and foreign departments, and by a lord high treasurer, who superintends the revenue and home arrangements. Each prov., or important dist. of a prov., is governed by a beglerbeg, usually a prince of the blood, or a nobleman of high rank, who appoints hakims over the subordinate dists. Each town and village has its magistrate, who is generally chosen by the people. Annual revenue of the shah, chiefly derived from land and capitation taxes, custom duties, tribute from wandering races, etc., has been estimated at from 1,500,000, to 2,000,000. The pop. is very mixed. The Parsees, who appear to preserve more fully than the rest a purity of descent from the ancient Persians, are now nearly confined to the city of Yezd, and some towns in Kerman, where they still retain fire-worship. The pop. of the towns and settled dists. generally is a race descended from Persians, Turks, Tartars, Georgians, Armenians, Arabs, and all the other nations who have at different periods held sway in the country. They are Mohammedans of the Shiah sect, rejecting the authority of the three first caliphs, on which and other accounts, there is between them and the Turks, Arabs, Bokharise, and most other Mussulmans, a perpetual feud. A few years back, the United Presbyterian Church in Scotland had the Scriptures translated into the Persian language, and sent them with two agents into that country for circulation. The Persians are a handsome, active, and generally warlike people. The nomadic tribes consist of Arabs in the S.; Turkmans, Moghuls, Uzbeks, in the E. and N.E.; and Kurds in the W. They dwell in tents, subsisting on the produce of their herds, and on plunder; and they furnish most part of the armed force, which is very variable in amount, but has been estimated lately at 80,000 men. In 1856, Persia having seized on Herat, war was proclaimed by the British, who took possession of Karak, Bushire, and Mahanmerah, but a peace was concluded in March 1857.

At its N.W. extremity it receives the Shat-ul-Arab, formed by the union of the Euphrates and Tigris rivers, and the Karun. It communicates on the E. with the Arabian Sea by a strait 50 miles across. It contains numerous islands, the principal being Kishm, Ormaz, Bushsheh, and Karak, off its N. or Persian coast, and the East India Company's and Bahrain islands, on its Arabian side, around which last named an extensive pearl fishery is carried on. Shores almost every where arid and sterile. On them are the cities Basorah and Bushire, and the towns Congoo, Neckloo, Gombroon, Zaberah, El Khatif, and Grane.

Principal public edifices, the church of St. John, supposed to have been originally erected in the 8th century, with a square tower 155 feet in height, and divided into three distinct places of worship, numerous other churches and chapels, the public reservoir, co. buildings, central model prison for Scotland formerly a depot for prisoners of war, co. infirmary, lunatic asylum, large barracks, the Marshall monument appropriated to the public, with a large library, the museum of the Perth literary and antiquarian society, town-hall, and King James VI. hospital. Perth has an educational seminary, an elegant structure, a grammar school, an academy, and several other endowed schools, 4 weekly newspapers, 2 local and 4 branch banks, and a custom-house. The Tay is navigable to the city for vessels of considerable burden, and extensive works have been undertaken for forming a new harbour and wet-dock. The general terminus of the Edinburgh and Perth, the Central, the Scottish Midland, and the Dundee, Perth, and Aberdeen, Railways, an elegant building, is situated in the W. suburbs; and the Dundee Railway crosses the Tay by a wooden bridge. Principal manufactures are those of coloured cotton stuffs, gingham, shawls, etc., and here are flax-spinning mills, bleachfields, distilleries, breweries, corn-mills, and iron foundries, rope-walks, tanneries, and dye-works. The glove trade has declined. Ship building is extensive and increasing, and the salmon fisheries in the Tay are very valuable, about 225 tons of fish being sent to London annually. Other principal exports are manuf. goods, corn, and potatoes. Registered shipping (1851) 5,585 tons; and 125 vessels entered, aggregate burden 11,256 tons. Number cleared out 303 ships, burden 18,721 tons. It has 2 weekly markets, and 5 annual fairs. Races take place on the North Inch park. Corporation rev. (1849) 5,273. The bor. sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,041. About 2 m. N. of the city is Scone, long a royal residence. Perth was an important station under the Romans, at the meeting of three great highways, and it has some remains which have been attributed to Agricola, with various ruins of ecclesiastical buildings. It was also frequently resorted to by the Scottish kings, and was the scene of many historical events. Its vicinity is very fertile.

Area estimated at 2,638 sq. m. or 1,666,320 ac., of which upwards of 1,000,000 ac. are arable or pasture, but according to other authorities, the area above given is much below the truth. Pop. 138,660. Surface extremely diversified, comprising both a highland and a lowland region. The Grampians extend through it in a N.E. direction, and are composed of granite and primary slate. Principal mountains, Benlawers 3,945 feet, Ben-More, 3,944 feet in height, and many of the other principal summits in Scotland in the dists. Athol, Breadalbane, Strathern, Perthshire is wholly drained by the Tay, and its afflu. the Earn, etc., except its S. part, which is watered by the Teith, Allan, and Devon. The Carse of Gowrie, on the Tay, is a deep alluvial clay, and very productive; the soil in the mountain districts is mostly light, and chiefly adapted for pasturage, sheep and cattle breeding being extensively followed. Agriculture has greatly improved, and wheat, barley, oats, beans, potatoes, turnips, and fruits, are raised for exportation. Farms vary in size from 50 to 500 ac. A large part of the co. has within the last century been planted with woods. Some coal is raised in the S.E., limestone, sandstone, marble, and slate are generally abundant, and lead is found in some places. Manufs., except at Perth, are not very flourishing; the principal are of linen, cotton, and woollen stuffs, leather, and paper. About half of the Lake Titicaca is comprised in South Peru. The whole coast region is arid and destitute of timber; and only the Piura river in this division is at all navigable. Rain rarely falls in the coast valleys of Peru W. of the Andes, but fogs and dews are frequent. Climate on the coast sultry and unhealthy, but higher up mild and salubrious. On the E. slopes of the Peruvian Andes rain falls copiously. Soil in the valleys of the upland region highly fertile, and here the grains of Europe are successfully raised. Extensive pastures also exist in this region, where sheep introduced by Europeans have been acclimated, and multiply with amazing rapidity. In the hotter portions of the country, sugar, maize, cotton, indigo, tobacco, yams, sweet potatoes, cocoa, and fine fruits, with cinchona bark, sarsaparilla, copaiba, vanilla, and other drugs, and valuable timber, are principal products. The mines of Peru are the principal source of its wealth. The silver mines of Cuzco de Pasco are the richest in the republic. The other chief mines are at Yauricocha, Cayae, Tanachauca, Parajirca, and Champsimarca. The average annual product from 1826 to 1835, was 8,338,712 francs; and from 1836 to 1846, it has averaged 12,000,000 francs. Besides the precious metals, it produces iron, copper, tin, coal, & nitrate of soda. The Sierra, between the two ridges of the Andes, is rich in mines; and at Huancavelica is a celebrated mine of quicksilver. The llama, alpaca, guanaco, and vicuña, are natives of the country, and the first especially is used as a beast of burden; mules are, however, mostly employed for travelling. Coarse cotton and woollen cloths and leather goods are generally made, with fine cloaks and blanketing, at Tarma; iron wares at Caxamarca; gold and silver articles, and jewelry, at Lima, Arequipa, and Cuzco; but in general manufactured goods are imported from Europe and North America, in return for raw produce. The want of roads interposes great obstacles to internal traffic; though, since the independence of Peru, a trade has been carried on with the Brazilian dists. on the Amazon, by way of the Huallaga, down which cotton, gums, resins, sarsaparilla, and wax, are exported. The maritime trade is chiefly with the ports on the W. side of America, but that with Europe is considerable, the exports thither consisting of bullion, bark, chinchilla skins, cotton, copper ore, vicuña, alpaca, sheeps' wool, hides, and sugar. In addition, a good deal of produce from Ecuador and Central America reaches Great Britain, by way of Peru; and, since 1841, a trade has sprung up in guano, of which article 95,063 tons were imported into England from Peru in 1850. In 1851, the quantity of calicoes exported from Great Britain amounted to 28,595,194 yards. Principal commercial ports are Callao, Islay, Paita, Lambayeque, Truxillo, Pisco, Arica, & Iquique. The constitution was framed in 1828, on the basis of that of the United States. The legislative body consists of a senate, and a chamber of deputies, one of the latter chosen for every 20,000 inhabitants by electoral colleges composed of one elector for every village of 200 inhabitants. The executive government is vested in a president, popularly chosen for four years, and assisted by a ministry chosen by himself, and a council of state chosen by the legislature. Each dep. has a prefect, and a junta composed of two members from each of its provs. In every prov. is a sub-prefect; in each of its dists. a justice of peace, and in each town, or Indian comuna, a mayor. Every village entitled to name an elector of deputies, has a municipal body. With a few exceptions, every Peruvian enjoys the rights of citizenship. The Roman Catholic is the state religion. Standing army 3,000 men. Public debt has been stated at 20,000,000 piastres. Peru was conquered from the dynasty of the Incas by the troops of Pizarro in 1532, from which time it remained one of the most important foreign possessions of Spain, until it acquired independence in 1821.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS (Span. Islas Filipinas), a large and important group in the Asiatic Archipelago, forming its N. division, and next to Cuba the most valuable colonial possession of Spain, chiefly between lat. 5° 33' and 19° 38' N., lon. 117° and 127° E., having N. and E. the Pacific Ocean, W. the China Sea, and S. the Seas of Sooloo and Celebes. There are 408 inhabited islands. Principal islands, Luzon, Mindanao, and Palawan, with Mindoro, Panay, Marinduque, Negros, Zebu, Bohol, Leyte, Samar, Masbate, and many of less size. Total area estimated at 260,000 (?) sq. m., but the Spanish dominion extends over only 52,143 sq. m. P. (1860) 3,815,878, those under Spanish rule (1849) 3,698,730, consisting of Papuan Negroes and independent tribes, Malay Indians, half-castes, and Chinese, Europeans and native whites. The islands are of volcanic formation, and contain a chain of active volcanoes. Earthquakes also are of frequent occurrence. The group is within the range of the monsoons, and violent hurricanes are common. From May to September the W. coasts are deluged with rain, while the October monsoon brings rain to the E. coast, at other seasons dry. The high temperature and abundance of moisture produce a luxuriant vegetation, so that they are capable of yielding all kinds of colonial, and probably European produce. Rice, millet, maize, sugar, indigo, hemp, tobacco, coffee, and cotton, are raised; and sago, cocoa nuts, bananas, cinnamon, betel, numerous fine fruits, and timber for ship-building, are among the products. Buffaloes, and most of the domestic animals common in Europe, are reared. There are no predaceous quadrupeds; the cayman is found in the rivers. Pearls, pearl oyster shell, the sea slug, edible birds' nests, and sapan wood, are important articles of export hence to China. Domestic weaving is pretty generally carried on by the females, and straw hats, cigar cases, and earthenwares are made; but the chief manufacture is that of "government Manila" cigars, which occupies 2,000 persons at a royal factory in Manila. The colonial policy of Old Spain excluded all foreign ships and Chinese settlers from these islands, and the trade with the Spanish dominions in America was also confined to that conducted annually by a single ship! But such restrictions have vanished since the revolution, and the colony is now making commensurate progress towards prosperity. In 1842, 149 ships, aggregate burden 44,869 tons, entered, and 162 do., burden 50,226 tons, cleared at the different ports. Imports amounted in value to $90,680, one-third from England, and more than another third from China, the U. S., and British India. Exports amounted in value to $74,100, chiefly sent to England, Spain, the U. S., China, and Australia. Manila is the principal seat of the trade, and also the seat of the government, it being the residence of the captain-general. In each of the larger islands is a lieutenant-governor; and each of the 80 provs., governed by an alcalde, is divided into pueblos or communes. The Roman Catholic religion has been extensively diffused among the Malay population. Public revenue is derived chiefly from duties on exports and imports, the tobacco monopoly, and a capitation tax, which, in 1837, was paid by 1,305,142 adults, of whom 901,924 belonged to the island Luzon. Armed force amounts to about 7,000 men, 1-10th Spaniards, and the rest Malays. These isls. were discovered by Magalhaens in 1521, and settled by the Spaniards in the reign of Philip II., after whom they were named.

Except a portion of the Pampas, which is watered by the Rio Negro, Colorado, and Desaguadero rivers, nearly all the country belongs to the basin of the Plata river, the great estuary of which is between this territory and Uruguay. The depts. Mendoza, La Rioja, Catamarca, and Salta, along its W. and N. frontier, are mountainous, and some elevated ranges are scattered over Cordova, and some parts of the country E. of the Paraná; but the rest of this region consists chiefly of two immense plains,—the N., watered by the Salado, Vermejo, Pilcomayo, etc., forming part of the Gran Chaco, which extends into the E. half of Bolivia; and the S. or Pampas, a plain covered alternately with luxuriant pasturage, vast crops of gigantic thistles, and interspersed with a multitude of salt lakes, some of large size. By far the most important product is cattle. Millions of oxen wander at large across the plains, or are reared on breeding estates of vast extent. Horses are also in immense herds, and mules are bred for sale to Peruvian and other traders. The breeds of sheep and swine are of inferior quality. The guanaco, llama, and vicuña, abound in the vicinity of the Andes; and the native animals comprise the puma, jaguar, and armadillo; the bisacha, the burrowing of which render excursions in the Pampas sometimes dangerous; and the small quadrupeds which furnish the nutria and chinchilla skins. North of Corrientes, cotton, tobacco, rice, the sugar-cane, and indigo are raised; maize, wheat, and other grains, are principal articles of culture in the S., and wheat has lately become an article of export. Other products are cochineal, cocoa, madder, cinchona bark, Paraguay tea, and various fruits; of the last, some introduced by Europeans have been found to flourish satisfactorily. In the dep. La Rioja, from 5,000 to 10,000 small barrels of strong wine are made annually, and sent into Cordova and the neighbouring depts.; and full-bodied wine and brandy is furnished to Buenos Ayres from the dep. Mendoza. All agricultural processes, however, are in the most backward condition. Salt effloresces in large quantities on the surface of the plains, and here are sometimes of rock-salt. Coal is reported to be plentiful in the S.W., and sulphur, alum, mineral pitch, etc., in the vicinity of the Andes; but few, if any, mines are wrought. The Indians of the Chaco manufacture yarn, ropes, fishing-nets, and other articles from the fibres of the alce, with saddle-cloths, blankets, and other fabrics which they dye with great skill, and sell to their more civilized neighbours; and in Cordova similar goods, morocco leather and turned wares are manufactured, but in general manufactured goods are imported from abroad in return for raw produce. In 1852, the rivers Paraná and Uruguay were opened to ships of every nation. The products or manufactures of the Thirteen Confederated Provinces, shall be free of all duties from one province to another. In the same year 63 ships, aggregate burden 18,325 tons entered, and 58 do., burden 18,092 tons, cleared the port. Government is nominally republican, and the legislative power in theory vested in a junta of 44 deputies, half annually renewed by popular election, and in a senate of 2 deputies from each department. Public revenue in 1850, amounted to 62,286,510 dollars. Expenditure 58,046,351 do. National debt 18,283,244 do. The country was discovered in 1517, and settled in 1553 by the Spaniards, under whom it was created into a vice-royalty. The English made an unsuccessful attempt on it in 1807. Its independence of Spain dates from 1816. In 1835, do Rosas, a successful soldier against the Indians, was elected dictator of Buenos Ayres, which he exercised with almost absolute rule, till he was defeated by Urquiza, the governor of Entre Rios, when Rosas fled to England.

PLATA (RIO DE LA) or the PLATE RIVER, one of the great rivers, or rather a great estuary of South America, Plata Confederation, formed by the junction of the Paraná and Uruguay rivers, in lat. 34° S., lon. 58° 30' W., its basin lying S. of those of the Amazon, Tocantins, and San Francisco, and its numerous tributaries draining most part of the Plata, Paraguay, and Uruguay territories, with considerable portions of Bolivia and Brazil. The estuary resulting from their union is 200 m. in length N.W. to S.E., and where it joins the Atlantic Ocean, is 170 m. across (between Maldonado and Cape St Antonio); its centre being about lat. 35° 30' S., lon. 56° W. Its muddy waters can be traced in the ocean 200 m. from its mouth. The total length of the Plata and the Paraguay has been estimated at nearly 2,500 m.; and from the ocean to the island Appe in the Paraná, at least 1,260 m., there is a continuous and safe navigation for vessels of 300 tons. The Aguapey, an affluent of the Paraguay near lat. 15° 40' S., lon. 58° 30' W., is separated only by a portage of 8 m. from the Alegre, a tributary of the Guapore, and were a canal to be made to connect the two streams, a complete system of internal navigation throughout nearly all South America would be secured.

It contains several islands, the principal being Mount Batten, with a fortification immediately opposite the Hoe of Plymouth. It is well watered, and covered with extensive forests. Chief rivers, the Narew, Niemen, Vistula, Bug, and Warta. There are many small lakes and marshes in the N.E. dists. Climate extreme. Buck-wheat, barley, and oats, are also cultivated. The grain called Danzig white wheat is grown in the S. provs. Building-timber, hemp, flax, and tobacco, are important products. The cattle and sheep are of inferior breeds. Chief mineral products, bog iron, copper, lead, zinc, and coal. The celebrated salt mines of ancient Poland are in Galicia. Nearly all the commerce is in the hands of the Jews. The Christians number 4,287,216; Jews 563,970; Mussulmans 291; and Bohemians 181. In the 15th century Poland extended from Russia in the E. to Germany on the W., and from the Baltic on the N. to Turkey on the S. Its area was larger than that of France, and its pop. is supposed to have amounted to 15,000,000. It was then divided into Great Poland, Little Poland, and Lithuania, which was incorporated with it in 1386. At the dismemberment of Poland in 1773, the three neighbouring powers, Russia, Prussia, and Austria, appropriated nearly one-third of the territory. Russia and Prussia, on the second partition in 1793, seized about half of the remaining portion, and the third partition in 1795, put an end to the republic. The last king of Poland, Stanislaus Augustus, died at St Petersburg in 1795. In 1807, Napoleon I. united a great part of anc. Poland under the name of the Grand duchy of Warsaw; this continued till 1815, when the kingdom of Poland was formed of the greater part of the former grand duchy. This state, of which the emperor of Russia was king, had a constitution, a separate army, and the use of the national language. It lasted till 1830, when a revolution took place, which terminated in 1831 by the surrender of Warsaw to the Russians, and the dispersion of the Poles. In 1832, Poland was declared an integral part of the Russian empire. A fresh attempt to restore its independence was made at Casow in 1846, which ended in the subjugation of this last remnant of ancient Poland, and its annexation to Austria. [GALICIA—POLEN.]

POLAR REGIONS, the zones surrounding the North and South Poles, within the Arctic and Antarctic circles. The North Polar Regions comprise the N. portion of Scandinavia in Europe, the N. portion of Siberia in Asia, the N. coast of North America, Baffin Bay, the greater part of Greenland, the islands of Spitzbergen, and the Parry Islands in the North Polar Sea. Within this region the temperature is, at Yakutsk in Siberia, Jan. minus 45°, July 68.8, Melville Island, Jan. minus 41°, July 42° 5'. The first attempt to discover a N.W. Passage through the Polar Sea was made by Cortereal, a Portuguese, about A.D. 1500. Willoughby sailed from the Thames in 1533. From that time till 1840, about 27 different sea and land expeditions were undertaken by British navigators, without success. In 1847, Captain Parry attained lat. 83° 40' N., lon. 19° 25' E., in boats. On 24th May 1843, Sir John Franklin and Captain Crozier left England in the "Erebus" and "Terror"; they were last seen on 26th July 1845, in lat. 74° 48' N., lon. 66° 13' W. Searching expeditions were sent out in 1848; but the first traces of the missing vessels were found at Cape Riley, in Barrow Strait, August 1850, in which year also Captain McClure solved the question of a N.W. passage, having coasted the N. shore of America from Behring Strait on the W. to the entrance of Melville Strait on the E. In 1854, remains of several seamen, with cooking utensils and other relics belonging to Franklin's expedition, were discovered on King William Land, W. of the isthmus of Boothia, but the ships were not found. The South Polar Regions were penetrated by Cook to lat. 67° 30' S., lon. 89° E., and to lat. 71° 10' S., lon. 110° W.; and in 1841 Sir James Ross discovered Victoria Land, with the active volcano of Erebus, 12,000 feet above the frozen surface of the ocean, in lat. 78° S., lon. 170° E., within 18° of the South Pole.

POLYNESIA ("many islands") includes the multitude of islands scattered over the Pacific Ocean, and comprehends a belt chiefly within 30° on each side of the equator, and from lon. 135° E. to 135° W. Including New Zealand, the boundary extends 3° S. of the equator to lat. 47° S. The islands are distributed into numerous groups, and these groups, of an elongated form, have a general direction from N.W. to S.E., and are composed of one or more larger islands, and numerous smaller ones. The principal groups to the N. of the equator, are the Pelew, Ladrone or Mariana, Caroline, Radeck, Marshall, Gilbert, and Sandwich Islands. S. of the equator are New Ireland, New Hebrides, New Britain, Feejee, Friendly, Navigator, Solomon, Society, Mendana or Marquessa, Low Archipelago, Cook, Austral, and other minor groups, besides numerous detached islands, as Easter and Pitcairn Islands. With the exception of Hawaii, the largest isl. of Polynesia, the most considerable of the others range from 20 to 60 and 100 m. in circumference, while many do not exceed a mile or two in length. These isls. are all, more or less, of coral formation; the low Archipelago, Society isls., Marshall, and Carolines presenting the regular atoll form, with circular reefs and lagoons. The Friendly, New Hebrides, Solomon, and Sandwich Islands present fringed reefs, and have active volcanoes; summits of mtns. varying from 2,000 to 13,000 feet. In the lower coral isls. the elevations do not exceed 500 feet. In the atoll coral isls., Darwin supposes that a depression of surface is taking place, and that the volcanic isls. are either stationary or rising. From the great predominance of ocean, the temperature of Polynesia is comparatively moderate, the climate delightful, and salubrious. Mean annual temp. of Sandwich Isls. 77°, temperature of Society Isls. 70° to 80°, and rarely 90°, Fahr. The S.E. tropical wind generally prevails, but N.W. and S.W. winds are not uncommon. Thunder storms and water spouts are frequent. Hurricanes are rare, earthquakes slight and not of frequent occurrence. The refreshing coolness of the trade winds, and a regular but not excessive supply of moisture are favourable to a luxuriant vegetation. Soil in the valleys and in the river courses, a rich volcanic mould; on the mountains less fertile. Both vegetable and animal productions are limited as to number of species. In the islands of the middle and eastern divisions not more than 500 species of plants are found. This number increases towards the W. and N.W. The bread fruit, peculiar to this region, the cocoa, banana, plantain, banyan, sugar-cane, yam, and cotton-plant, paper mulberry, and a species of chestnut, are indigenous. Other trees and plants of tropical climates have been introduced and flourish; and arrow-root, sweet potatoes, the common potato, and maize, are now reared abundantly. There are several timber trees, especially sandal-wood, a few spices, and ornamental flowers, which, however, have little odour or decided colour. The islands were all remarkably deficient in animals, thus indicating their isolated and comparatively recent origin. Swine, dogs, and rats were the only quadrupeds; snakes, or other reptiles are confined to Navigator group; vampire bats are found in some of the islands. Land birds are not numerous, owls, parrots, pigeons, and some passerines forming the most remarkable; wild ducks, and other water fowls are more plentiful. Turtles resort in great numbers to many localities, and fish are plentiful on the coasts. Several species of whales, the cachalot or sperm whale, Cape whale, hump back, and black fish, are peculiar to the seas of the Pacific, and their capture has been the chief inducement for ships visiting these regions. Oxen have been introduced from New South Wales, and thrive well; and horses from South America. The natives of Polynesia are in general a well-formed, tall, active, and intelligent people. There are two distinct races, one apparently of Malay origin, by far the most numerous and intellectual, and spread over all central and eastern Polynesia, and speaking one common language, though varying in dialects. The other a negro or Papuan race, with negro features and colour, and crisped mop-like hair, growing in separate tufts, speaking a distinct language, and exhibiting an intellect of an inferior grade, probably the first settlers of the islands, and now confined to the W. part of Polynesia, and inhabiting partly or wholly New Guinea, New Britain, New Ireland, the Solomon islands, New Caledonia, New Hebrides, and part of the Ladrone islands. In some of the isls. there is a partial intermixture of the two races, and in others an apparent Caucasian intermixture, indicated by the ample beard and prominence of the features. Some of the western isls., as the Ladrone, were discovered by Magalhães in 1521, the Marquessa by Mendana in 1595, but it was not till 1767, that Wallis, and subsequently Cook, explored and described the leading islands of this region. Soon after this, missionaries began to settle in the islands, and after many discouragements at last have succeeded in promoting Christianity and civilization in some of the principal islands; though cannibalism and savage ferocity still prevail in the majority. In 1844, there were 45 British and American missionary stations in Polynesia, the principal being in the Sandwich Islands, Tahiti and Society Isls., Friendly Islands, Feejee Islands, New Hebrides, and Hervey Islands. The pop. of these islands varies continually from wars, migrations, and occasional pestilence. Tahiti and some others, when first discovered, were conjectured to be greatly more populous than at present, but no proper data exist for affording even an approximation to the real number. Probably the population of the whole of Polynesia does not exceed 1,000,000, or 1,500,000. [For further information, see the individual groups and islands.]

The territory S. of the principal chain of the Apennines is watered by the Tiber and its affluents the Chiana, Topino, Nera, and Tevereone, which flow S.W. to the Mediterranean. N. of the Apennines, it is watered by the Lamone, Savio, Marecchia, Metauro, Esino, Musone, Fozzena, Chienti, and Tronto, small torrents from the Apennines; and the N. frontier is traversed by the chief branch of the Po—all tributaries to the Adriatic. The principal lakes are those of Perugia, Bolsena, Albano, and Bracciano; and the marshes of Comacchio, and Pontine marshes. The territory is traversed longitudinally by the chain of the Apennines, of which the highest point, within its limits, is Monte Velino, 8,210 feet. In the N., it comprises part of the great plain of the Po, and in the S.W. the undulating plain called the Campagna di Roma, terminating in the Pontine marshes, noted for insalubrity. The climate varies greatly in different quarters. In the legations, situated on the N. of the Apennines opposite the snow-clad Alps, the winter is severe, while in the S. the climate is very mild, except in the mountain districts; and the region of the Campagna di Rome would be a blooming garden, but for the fatal effects of the miasma, which forces the cultivators of the soil to seek refuge at night in the few scattered towns near its borders. The mean temperature of the year at Rome is  $60^{\circ} 4'$  Fahr., warmest month  $76^{\circ}$ ; coldest month  $45^{\circ}$  Fahr. The soil is generally fertile, but neglected; it is calculated that only one-third of the superficies is under cultivation; much of the surface affords excellent pasturage, which is occupied by great herds of buffaloes. Considerable flocks of sheep and many horses are reared; great numbers of swine roam in the forests of the Apennines. Agriculture is backward. The chief crops are wheat, maize, pulse, hemp, wine, oil, and tobacco; oats, barley, and rye are grown in the N. legations; in the extreme S. sugar, indigo, and cotton are cultivated to a small extent, and cork trees are numerous. The wines are of inferior quality. Chestnuts form a considerable article of food. There are in the states mines of iron, lead, sulphur, alum, vitriol, and other volcanic products, but they are all nearly unproductive, except the sulphur mines near Kummi. Salt is made in the lagoons of Ostia, Comacchio, and Cervia, to the amount of more than 84,000,000 lbs annually. The fisheries are mostly conducted by the inhabitants of the kingdom of Naples. Manufacturing industry is confined to the large cities and for home consumption; it comprises silks, leather, gloves, paper, musical strings, iron and glass wares, a few cotton goods at Rome, crapes and saunges with the Mediterranean states. In the Pontifical States there were, in 1844, 9 archbishops, 62 bishops, 13 abbacies, 1,824 monasteries, and 612 convents. Secular clergy were estimated at 35,000, monks 10,000, and nuns 8,000. Education is conducted in universities, colleges, seminaries, and elementary schools. The seats of the seven universities are Bologna, the most ancient and celebrated in Italy, Rome, Perugia, Ferrara, Camerino, Urbino, and Macerata, the last four founded in 1824; in 1841 these were attended in all by 2,400 students. The proportion of students in the state schools was only 1 in 50. No general provision is made for the education of the lower orders, and the instruction imparted is very inferior in quality. The government is an absolute elective monarchy; the Pope chosen by the college of cardinals from their own body, is at the same time the head of the universal Romish church, and a temporal sovereign. Previous to the 7th century, the popes were only bishops of Rome; the basis of their temporal power was laid by the successive donations of Pepin, Charlemagne, and the emperor Henry III., but was consolidated only in the 16th century. At the French revolution of 1790, the popes lost their possession of Arignon and Venaisian, and in 1797 their domain was further diminished by the legations ceded to the Cisalpine republic. In 1808 Napoleon I. divided the other states between the kingdom of Italy and the French empire, but

In 1814 all these territories were restored to the Pope, except Avignon. In 1847, Pope Pius IX. established a constitutional parliament, consisting of 99 deputies popularly elected, but the revolution of 1848, which commenced by the assassination of Count Rossi, overturned these arrangements. The pope fled from Rome, but has since returned. The papal forces are governed by a board, whose head is a prelate. In 1858 12 m. of railway were opened, and others in progress. Revenue (1858) 14,862,068 scudi. Expenditure, 14,320,022 scudi. Army (1858) 15,225 men; 1,350 horses. The French corps of occupation at Rome is reduced to one division. The Austrians occupy Bologna and Ancona. The interest of the public debt absorbed 98 per cent. of the income.

PONTINE MARSHES, Paludi Pontine, a vast marshy tract of Italy, in the S. portion of the Campagna di Roma, extending along the coasts of the Mediterranean, from Cisterna on the N., to Terracina on the S., a distance of 25 m. The surface has a general inclination from N.E. to S.W. It is traversed by several mountain ranges, chiefly prolongations of the Spanish mountains.—I. the Serra Estrella, a continuation of the Serra de Gata, highest point 7,624 feet in elevation.—II. the Serra de Monchique, a continuation of the Serra Morena. N. and S. of these extend fine plains, watered by the Minho, the Duro, Tagus, and Guadiana, which enter the country from Spain, and with the Mondego and the Sado, rising in Portugal, all flow W. to the Atlantic Ocean. The largest plain is that of Alentejo, S. of the Tagus. There are no lakes in Portugal, but several salt marshes. The coast line, 500 m. in extent, presents along its shores many fine harbours. The climate, in general healthy, is especially so in the elevated coast regions, and on the plateaux of the interior; the exceptions are the vicinity of the salt marshes, and parts of the banks of the Tagus and Mondego. Mean temp. of year at Coimbra 63°; Lisbon 61.3° Fahr. Rain is very abundant on the W. coast, especially in autumn. Snow is rare in the S. provs., but falls heavily on the mountains of the N. provs.; it lies permanently on Mount Gaviara (prov. Minho), 7,865 feet above the sea. Earthquakes occur frequently in the S., and in the vicinity of Lisbon. The soil is rich, husbandry is backward, and there are few passable roads. Wheat, barley, oats, flax, and hemp, are cultivated in the elevated tracts, rice in the lowlands, olives, oranges, lemons, citrons, figs, and almonds, in the central and S. provs., and at the S. extremity, the American aloes, the date, and other tropical plants. The cultivation of the vine is the most important branch of industry, and the produce of the vineyards, on the upper Douro, termed port, is the staple export. There are extensive forests of oak in the N., chestnut in the centre, and the sea pine, kermes, and cork in the S. The olive oil is of inferior quality. Mules and asses are the chief beasts of burden, oxen are used for draught in the provs. Cattle and sheep are reared in considerable numbers, but the wool is not of fine quality. Goats and swine are numerous, and fish abound in the rivers and on the coasts. Iron, marble, and salt, are the chief mineral products; the mines of tin, lead, and antimony, are not worked. There are numerous salt marshes on the coast, and upwards of 200 mineral springs. The manufactures are very limited, chiefly arms and porcelain, at Lisbon, woollens at Portalegre and Fundao, cotton spinning at Thomar, jewellery and trinkets at Lisbon and Oporto, glass at Marinha-Grande, paper at Alemquer, silks at Braganza and at Campo-Grande, near Lisbon. The government is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy, the religion of the state is Roman Catholic, but Protestants and Jews are tolerated. The church is governed by a patriarch, 5 archbishops, and 24 bishops. The Inquisition was abolished in 1821, and its enormous revenues have been applied to state purposes. Educational establishments are very defective, with the exception of the cap., which contains extensive libraries, an observatory, and several literary & scientific institutions. Portugal, which forms the greater part of the ancient Lusitania, was successively conquered by the Romans in the 3d century B.C., by the Visigoths in the 6th century, by the Arabs in 712 and 715, and afterwards by the Christians of Spain. In 1189, Alphonse Henriquez, son of Henry of Burgundy, having gained a victory over the Moors at Ourique, was proclaimed the first king of Portugal. Berlin. Prussia is composed of two distinct, and very unequal portions, separated by Brunswick, Hesse, Waldeck, Lippe, and Nassau, for 30 m. at nearest point. The E. most and largest portion, or Prussia E. of the Weser, is bounded E. by Russia, S. by Austria, Saxony, and Electoral Hesse, W. by Brunswick, Hanover, and Mecklenburg, and N. by the Baltic Sea. The surface of Prussia is in general flat, except in the prov. Saxony, where it is traversed by parts of the Harz mountains and the Thuringerwald, and in the S. between Silesia and Bohemia, by the Riesen Gebirge, or Giant mountains. The E. provs. belong to the basin of the Baltic, in which the chief rivers are, the Memel or Niemen, the Pregel, Vistula, and Oder, with its affluent the Warta. The W. provs. belong to the basin of the North Sea, and are watered by the Elbe, and its affluents the Saale, Havel, and Spree, the Weser, Rhine, and Rhine, with its affluents the Moselle and Lippe. The canal of Bromberg connects the Vistula with the Warta, the canal of Emmerich unites the Oder with the Havel, an affluent of the Elbe; and the canal of Frederick William connects the Oder with the Spree. The Rhine, which is here navigable for large vessels, and is celebrated for its picturesque beauty, separates Rhenish Prussia into two nearly equal parts, each of which has an elevated table-land and a low plain; the chief part of the table-land lies N. of the Moselle, on l. b. of the Rhine, and is called the Eifel and the Hohe Veer, 1,000 feet in elevation. This region is of basaltic formation, intermixed with tracts of lava; it presents evident traces of volcanic action. On the rt. b. of the Rhine, the table-land forms the elevated ridge of the Taunus, mean elevation about 2,000 feet, culminating point the Feldberg 2,850 feet; this table-land extends N. between the rivers Lahn and Sieg, where it is called the Westerwald, mean elevation 1,600 feet. The coasts of the Baltic are covered with extensive lagoons, the principal of which are the Curische-Haff at the mouth of the Niemen, the Frische-Haff at the mouths of the Vistula and Pregel, and the Stettiner-Haff at the mouth of the Oder. The E. provs. are remarkable for the great number of lakes they contain; of these, Lake Spirding has an area of 20 sq. m., and Lake Mauer is nearly as large. The islands of Prussia are Rugen, Usedom, and Wollin, in the Baltic. The climate of Prussia, generally temperate and salubrious, is humid and cold in the N., but in Rhenish Prussia it is warm enough for the production of excellent wine. Mean temperature of year in E. Prussia (Prussia proper), lat. 50° 30', at an elevation of 40 feet, 43°; Central Prussia, lat. 52° 30', elevation 210 feet, 45°; Rhenish Prussia, lat. 51°, elevation 250 feet, 49°. Mean annual fall of rain, in the W. provs. 20 inches, decreasing toward the E. Prevailing winds W., and cold often severe. The soil is fertile in many places, and grain is produced in sufficient quantity for the dense population, and is even exported to a considerable extent. The most fertile dists. occur along the course of the Niemen and Vistula, on l. b. of the Oder, and on the Elbe, where the vicinity of Magdeburg is so fertile that it is called the granary of Berlin. The most barren region is the Tucher Heide, in the prov. W. Prussia, 50 m. long and 25 m. broad, which is covered with sand, interspersed with stunted shrubs. The cap. is situated in an extensive sandy plain, which is interspersed with fertile tracts, and covered in some places with fine forests. Agriculture, which forms the chief source of national wealth, is carefully conducted; the principal crops are wheat, rye, oats, barley, flax, hemp, hops, and tobacco; fruit is not widely grown. The vine is cultivated in Rhenish Prussia, on the banks of the Moselle and Rhine, and to a small extent in detached districts of Central and E. Prussia. The pasturage is excellent; sheep, cattle, and horses, of improved breeds, are extensively reared; and wool is an important product. Goats are numerous in the mountain dists. of Silesia and Saxony; swine in Pomerania, Saxony, and Westphalia, which last is celebrated for its hams: wild boars, stags, fallow deer, hares, and rabbits, are plentiful, as are wolves and foxes; bears are seldom met with. The lynx, beaver, badger, otter, weasel, and marten, are common, but the ermine is rare. Wild geese are extremely numerous. Bees are extensively reared, and the breeding of the silk worm has recently assumed importance. Mines of iron, copper, and lead, are worked in the provs. of Rhenish Prussia and Westphalia, and in the Harz mountains; the mountains are well wooded, and contain marble and some of the precious stones. Ashber (a government monopoly) is found on the shores of the Baltic. The manufactures of Prussia are very extensive, and have recently become important; the chief branches are linen, in all the provs.; woollen cloths, and cottons, in Rhenish Prussia, at Barmen, Crefeld, and Elberfeld; silk stuffs, iron founding, carriage building, saddlery, chemical products, sugar refining, and brewing. The porcelain of Saxony, called Dresden china, is highly valued Commerce is very active in Prussia, and has been greatly developed by the establishment of the commercial customs union (Zollverein), by the many navigable rivers, excellent roads, and canals, and by railways, of which 2,514 miles were opened in 1868 (Bismarck), connected with which are lines of telegraph extending to the chief points on the frontier. The chief exports are the productions of the soil and the manufactures of the country. Imports colonial produce, cotton, silk, tobacco, printed calicoes, silks, etc. The population of Prussia comprises two principal races,—I the Germans who form the majority,—and II the Slavonians in the grand duchy of Posen, in Prussia Proper, and in a part of Upper Silesia. The government is a hereditary monarchy; the authority of the king is absolute, but modified by provincial estates, and further by a constitution, granted in 1847. The king is a member of the Zemmelin for the German nation. His states are except Prussia and Posen. Calvinism is the religion of the royal family, and of the majority of the people, but all sects are tolerated. The following are the numbers of the different classes.—Protestants, 10,500,000; Roman Catholics, 6,200,000; Greek Church, 1,400; Anabaptists, 14,700; and Jews, 220,000. Public instruction is more developed in Prussia than in any other country in Europe, except Saxony; it possesses the celebrated universities of Berlin, Halle, and Bonn, besides those of Breslau, Greifswald, and Königsberg, and numerous literary and learned societies. The system of education established by the government is of a thoroughly practical nature and is considered the most complete and efficient in Europe. The different classes of schools are—I the elementary school at which the great majority of the people receive their education.—II the city school, which is always attached to a gymnasium.—III the gymnasium, in which Latin and Greek are taught. In most of the small towns are normal schools for the training of teachers. The universities are all under the control of the government. In 1841 there were in all 2,000 schools in Prussia, of which 2,166 were elementary schools, and in 1849 2,454,000 pupils were attending the primary schools. Attendance at school is compulsory from the ages of 5 until 14 years. In the middle of the 13th century, the Teutonic knights subjugated Prussia, and converted the people to Christianity. Albert of Brandenburg, grand master of the order, appropriated the country in 1525, his family augmented these possessions, and Frederick, one of his descendants, obtained the title of king in 1701; he acquired the principality of Neuchâtel in Switzerland. By the treaty of Utrecht William I. obtained a portion of the duchy of Gelder, he acquired the duchy of Limburg, and took from Sweden the greater part of Pomerania. Frederick II. the Great conquered Silesia, which was abandoned by Austria in 1742; this king and his successor took part in the dismemberment of Poland, and thus acquired the grand duchy of Posen. By the treaty of Tilsit in 1807, Prussia was deprived of all her possessions between the Rhine and the Elbe, and the greater part of Prussian Poland, but in 1815, after the fall of Napoleon I., the Congress of Vienna restored all these estates, except a part of Poland, and at the same time granted to Prussia a part of Saxony, and the duchy of the Lower Rhine. Military service for 3 years is imperative on all the male pop., who subsequently form the Landwehr, the 1st battalion of which is composed of men from 25 to 32, and the 2d, men from 32 to 38 years of age. The Landsturm comprises all others capable of bearing arms between the ages of 17 and 50. In 1854, the standing army was 125,000 men. The royal navy was composed of 1 frigate of 48 guns, 1 corvette of 12 guns, 2 schooners, 42 gun-boats, 3 steamers, 1 steamer under repair, and 4 other vessels in course of construction, being a total of 54 ships, carrying in all 288 guns. Public rev. (1854) 102,000,484 dollars; expenses 101,410,477 dollars. Public debt, with interest, 1st January 1849, 102,861,444 dollars.

PUNJAB, an extensive territory of N.W. India, embracing the country traversed by the "five great waters," of which the Indus is the most westerly and the Sutlej the most easterly. The outline of the district is angular, the apex being at the point where the Indus and the Punjab meet, in lat. 28° 55' N., lon. 70° 28' E. The N. is an elevated region, formed by the Bolor, Tibet, and W. Himalaya mountains, whence issue six rivers which flow S. through a low level lying region. The rivers are the Indus, Jhytum, Chenab, Ravee, Beas, and Sutlej. Length N.E. to S.W., from Nobra in Ladakh to the confluence of the Indus and Punjab, about 600 m. Breadth, from Rampur to Derbend, 350 m. Area of the Punjab Proper 78,000 sq. m. Pop. estimated at 4,740,000, consisting of Sikhs, Cashmerians, and Afghans. The N. part of the state is a range of mountains, 30,000 to 27,000 feet above the sea. The W. range, enclosing the valley of the Indus, is of granite and primary rocks. The Rupshu Spiti and adjacent part of Ladakh, are of secondary strata, with organic remains; the E. Cashmerians are volcanic and basaltic, with limestones. S. of lat. 34°, the country rapidly slopes to the alluvial plain of the Punjab, which extends for several hundred miles without any considerable eminence except the salt ranges at the base of the Himalaya, which contain immense beds of rock-salt, as also alum, sulphur, nitre, coal, and gypsum. The great plain is divided by the intercourses of its rivers into five doabs. The soil in general is sandy and barren, but with many fertile spots intermixed, and there are abundant means of irrigation. Summer temperature of the plains is generally hot and dry; winter cool, with frost at intervals. Temperatures at Lahore in June, in the shade, 112° Fahr. The vegetation of the Punjab resembles that of Eastern India. The sugar-cane, palm, orange, and other fruit-trees flourish, and all kinds of grain crops are raised, as well as opium, indigo, and tobacco. Camels, buffaloes, and horses, are reared in the extensive pasture lands, but rural industry is by no means generally practised. Silk and cotton fabrics, carpets, shawls, and warlike arms, are manufactured in the towns. A considerable transit trade is carried on in goods imported from eastern India and carried westward; bullion, silk, drugs, and dyes being received in return. The population is of a mixed kind. In the N. are Tibetan Mongolians, and the remains of former Afghan conquerors are scattered over the whole country; the great majority of the people are Punjab Jats, descendants of Hindoo Rajpoot Jats; the Khalsa Sikh population may amount to 500,000. Their religion, originally supposed to have been a pure deism, is now a modification of Hindooism; they have no castes, and the military profession is open to all. Their morals are depraved and sensual. In person the Sikhs resemble the Hindoos, but are of more robust and active habits than the natives of Middle India, and they excel in warlike enterprise. The Sikh government, a military despotism, extends over the whole of the Punjab, Kashmir, Ladakh, and Bulh, Peshawar W. of the Indus, and the Derajat as far S. as the frontier of Scinde. The revenue was formerly estimated at about 2,500,000*l.* annually. Runjeet Singh had an army of 75,000 men. Principal towns, Lahore, the cap., Amritsar, Serhmagur, Mooltan, Peshawar, Jullinder, Jelaipoor. The Punjab was the scene of Alexander the Great's oriental conquests. At the beginning of the 10th century, it was overrun by Mahommud of Ghuznee "the destroyer;" subsequently it was conquered by the Afghans, and in 1526 by Baber the Mogul conqueror. Under the late Runjeet Singh, the power and boundaries of the kingdom were greatly extended; on his death in 1839, and the subsequent massacres of his nearest heirs, the country became the scene of anarchy. An unprovoked invasion of the British territories E. of the Sutlej by a powerful army of the Sikhs in 1845, led to a series of British victories at Moodkee, Ferozeshah, Aliwal, and Sabraon, and their submission by treaty in 1846. This treaty was again broken by Shere Singh in 1848, and the Sikh force was finally defeated and dispersed at Goojerat, 21st February 1849. The Punjab was then formally annexed to the British possessions in India.

Next to the Alps, the Pyrenees are in general the highest mountains of Europe; the summit of the chain forms a curved line with a mean altitude of 7,900 feet. The slope is much more gentle on the N. than on the S. side. On the N. side the mountains send off numerous offsets which cover part of the French depts., and the descent is more gradual at the W. than at the E. extremity. The primary formation is less extensive than in the Alps; it consists of granite, micaceous schist, and primitive limestone, which form a continuous band stretching three-fourths across the isthmus. The bulk of the system is composed of secondary rocks, which are arranged in vertical bands flanking the older rocks, and consist of clay-slate, graywacke, and blue limestone. The coalite and chalk formations occur on the lower part of the chain. Snow lies deep in the mountains during a great part of the year, and is perpetual on the higher points. Corn grows in some of the upper valleys, maize is cultivated at the vill. of Lescar (Lower Pyrenees), at an elevation of 3,280 feet, and the pine tree grows at 10,870 feet above the sea. were formerly worked, but are now abandoned. Several of the streams are auriferous, but no gold or silver mines are worked. The valley of Cardous contains a remarkable deposit of rock-salt, one of the beds measuring 300 by 750 feet. The Pyrenees give their name to three depts. of France.

Red Sea or Arabian Gulf, an inland sea between Africa and Asia (Arabia), lat. 12° 40' to 30° N., lon. 32° 30' to 43° 30' E. Length, N.W. to S.E., upwards of 1,400 m.; breadth varies to nearly 200 m. At its S. extremity it communicates with the Indian Ocean by the Strait Babel-Mandeb. In its N. part it bifurcates into the Gulfs of Suez and Akabah, which enclose the peninsula of Sinai. Depth varies, average about 100 fathoms. It abounds with islands and coral reefs, and is supposed to have derived its name from the red coral and pink-coloured fucil which it yields; or from the anc. Eduma, "Sea of Edom" or "Red Sea;" or from the blood-red colour frequently imparted to it from animalcules. The country almost everywhere around it is mountainous. The S.E. monsoon blows constantly for eight months of the year, and during the remainder, the N.W. monsoon. From October to May, when S. winds prevail, the water rises in the N. part of the sea, which then attains an elevation much higher than the Mediterranean, but from careful levelings it has been ascertained that the low water levels of the Red Sea and Mediterranean are identical. The navigation is difficult owing to sudden changes of wind and heavy gales. Principal ports are Moeha, Hodeida, Lohia, Jiddah, and Yembo on the Arabian side, and Suez, Kossair, Soukin, and Massawah on the Egyptian, Nubian, and Danakil coasts. The Jews and Phoenicians appear to have carried on an extensive trade upon this sea, and after the destruction of the Persian empire, it resumed importance as the principal route of traffic between Europe and the East, which distinction it retained until the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. It has again recovered some of its ancient consequence, as part of the direct route between Europe and India. [ADEN—BABEL-MANDEB.]

RHINE (German Rhein, anc. Rhenus), an important and celebrated river of Europe, is formed in Switzerland by the union of two small streams, the Emser and Vorder Rhein; the first springs from the glacier of Rheinwald, and the second rises on the N. side of Mount St Gothard at a height of 7,650 feet, these meet at Reichenau in the canton Grisons. The united stream flows generally N. past Meyenfeld, and enters the Lake of Constance on the S E near Rheineck, at Stein it quits the lake at its W. extremity, flows W. past Schaffhausen and Laufenburg, separating Switzerland from Bavaria. At Basle, where the Upper Rhine terminates with an elevation of 753 feet, and a breadth of 300 feet, it turns to the N., and flows past Breisach and Strasbourg, Speyer and Mannheim, where its bed is 300 feet above the sea, between the territories of Baden on the E., and France and Rhenish Bavaria on the W. From Worms to Mayence, it traverses the Hessian territories. At Mayence it receives the Main, and flows W. to Bingen, where it turns to the N. W., passing Coblenz, Bonn, Cologne, and Düsseldorf (near which it attains its greatest breadth 2,300 feet), Wesel and Emmerich, where its course is again westerly, till entering the Netherlands it reaches the North Sea by several branches, having a delta larger than that of any other European river. [See DELTAS.] The principal affluents of the Rhine are on right, the Kinzig, Neckar, Main, Lahn, Ruhr, Lippe, and on left, the Thur, Aa, Ille, and Moselle. From Chur to Basle, the Rhine is only partially navigable, on account of the rapidity of its current, the numerous rocks which impede it, and its waterfalls, the greatest of which is at Laufen near Schaffhausen, where it falls 80 feet. From Basle to the sea, the navigation for steamers and large barges is continuous. In September 1853, it rose 13 feet above its highest water mark, and overflowed the country near Strasbourg. In the Netherlands it is connected by canals with its several branches, and with the sea. The Great North Canal unites it to the Meuse and the Rhete, affluents of the Scheldt, and the canal of the Rhône and Rhine in France connects it with the Rhone by the Saône. In Bavaria it communicates with the Danube by means of the Main, and the Altmühl and Ludwig Canal. The direct distance of the Rhine from its source to its mouth is 360 m., following its windings it is about 900 m., and its basin comprises an area of 63,290 sq. m. ROCKY MOUNTAINS, an extensive mountain range of North America, commencing on the S. with the plateaus and cordilleras of Mexico and California, and terminating on the N. in the broken ridges of Russian America. It covers the whole western side of the continent; is 4,500 m. in length from Mexico to the Arctic coast. There are three separate parallel belts.—1st, the lofty double chain of the Rocky Mountains Proper on the E.; 2d, the range of high and wide broken table-lands lying W. of that chain; and lastly, a lofty mountainous chain, partially volcanic, rugged and convulsed, the Pacific Alps of the N.W. coast, the cascade range of Oregon, and the Sierra Nevada of California.—I. Chain of the Rocky Mountains Proper is an elevated and complex system of mountain summits, and included table-lands, embracing two, and in some places three principal mountain ranges, which, with their component ridges, are approximately parallel for great distances, but their lesser sections variously diverge and mosaiculate. In Northern Mexico the E. range is called the Cordillera of Cohahuila and Potosi, the Guadalupe Mountains being an eastern outlying branch. The western range is named the Sierra de los Mimbres, and Sierra Madre. Further N., at the sources of the Arkansas, the E. belt is the Moro and Chowatche or Wet Mountain; and the W. the Sierra Verde or San Juan. Between these two ranges is included the valley of Santa Fé, or of Rio del Norte, an extensive and fertile plain. From the Arkansas to the N. fork of the Platte, the chain is triple and very complex, and its central range, called the Medicine Bow Mountains, contains the Spanish, Pike, Loug, and Paramie Peaks, which have an elevation of from 10,000 to 12,000 feet above the sea. Fremont Peak, in the Wind River Mountains, has an elevation of 13,668 feet; from its base flow the head streams of the Missouri, the Columbia, and the Rio Colorado. Near lat. 44° is the N. end of the Wahsatch, a long and lofty mountain range, which passes W. of the Green River or Upper Colorado, and forms the E. boundary of the Utah basin. Strictly, this is not a ridge of the chain of the Rocky Mountains Proper, although originating near that chain—its trend and structure are different. To the N. of the Wind River range, the E. axis is much elevated, where it separates the middle and north sources of the Columbia River from the streams of the Missouri and Saskatchewan. Near the head of the latter stream is the peak of Mount Hooker, 15,700 feet above the sea, and further N. Mount Brown, 15,990 feet in elevation. Hence, the chain gradually declines in level to the Arctic Ocean. Comparatively little is known of the geological formation of the Rocky Mountain chain. Granitic and gneissic rocks, various paleozoic strata, including carboniferous limestones, have been seen. Between the highest ridges vast plateaus, seemingly of cretaceous and tertiary deposits. It has recently been ascertained that the chief rivers and streams flow round the ends of the long ridges, rather than through gorges cutting them. This important fact reveals great facilities for the formation of railways uniting the coasts of the Atlantic and Pacific, through this mountain chain.—II. The Great Interior Plateau is a wide and elevated middle belt, between the Rocky Mountains Proper on the E., the Pacific Alps and Sierra Nevada on the W., and stretches from the Gulf of California to the Arctic Ocean, having a mean elevation of nearly 5,000 feet above the sea. It is naturally divided into three regions, a central, S., and N.—III. The Pacific Alps is the W. belt of the elevated zone of North America. It runs generally parallel to the chain of the Rocky Mountains proper, N. from the peninsula of California, where it is rather low, increasing in height and breadth in the N. part of California, and thence to Russian America, a broad and elevated chain of mountains. In the vicinity of Columbia River are the peaks of Mount Jefferson, Mount Hood, and Mount St. Helens, which are upwards of 15,000 feet, above the sea. Mounts St. Helens and Regnier are active volcanoes. Mount Fairweather, 14,782 feet, and Mount St. Elias, 17,550 feet in elevation above the sea, are volcanoes, and supposed to be occasionally in a state of eruption. It is presumed that these are the loftiest peaks in North America.

ROME (Ital. Roma), a city of Italy, cap. of the Pontifical States, and formerly the metropolis of the greater part of the world known to the ancients, is situated on the Tiber, 17 m. N.E. its mouth in the Mediterranean. Lat. of the Roman College 41° 53' 52" N., lon. 12° 28' 40" E.; elevation above the sea, on the Tiber, under the Ælian Bridge, 20 feet. Pop. (1900) 153,000; (1838) 170,701; (1846) 180,300, including 18,650 visitors; (1856) 178,798, exclusive of visitors. The city is built on marshy ground, at the foot of a range of low hills, and is separated by the Tiber into two unequal portions, which are divided into 14 Rioni or quarters; of these 12 are in Rome proper, or the space on the E. or l. b. of the river, and only 2 on the W. or rt. b., called the Leonine city or Trastevere; in the former are the Vatican and the Castle of St Angelo. Its walls are 12 m. in circumference, and are pierced for 16 gates, 4 of which are built up, — the finest are the Porta del Popolo on the N., and the Porta San Giovanni on the S. of the city. Little more than one-third of the space within its walls is inhabited, most of the space S. of the capitol being used as gardens and vineyards. The most populous part of the modern city occupies the site of the ancient Campus Martius, a plain extending between the Capitoline, Quirinal, Pincian hills, and the river. The Tiber, within the walls, has a winding course of 3 miles. It is navigable for large boats and river steamers; after heavy rains it frequently rises 20 or 30 feet, and inundates a great part of the city. Near the middle of its course the Tiber forms an island, called S. Bartolomeo, 900 feet long and 300 feet broad, connected with the mainland by 2 bridges; besides which, the only others are the Ponte Sisto, the Ponte Rotto, now converted into a suspension bridge, & the Ponte S. Angelo, the latter connecting the city with the Castle of St Angelo, the chapel of Rome, which serves for a state-palace. The three principal thoroughfares of Rome diverge from the Piazza del Popolo, an irregular open space at its N. extremity; the central of these, the Corso, extends in a direct line 3.3.3. for about a mile. There are in all 506 streets, 375 lanes, and 148 squares, of all dimensions; most of these are ornamented with richly sculptured fountains, of which there are in Rome 136. These are supplied with excellent water by 3 aqueducts; the finest is called Acqua Vergine, — the others are Acqua Felice and Acqua Paola. Notwithstanding its architectural and artistical riches, modern Rome has a sad and desolate aspect. Most of the streets are narrow, dirty, and unpaved; in these the finest palaces and the most wretched hovels are often seen side by side. Near the Capitoline Mount is the Ghetto or Jews' quarter, a filthy space, enclosed by walls with gates, under charge of the police, within which 6,000 or 7,000 Jews reside. The situation of Rome is unhealthy, especially in summer, from the effects of malarial; but, from the mildness of its winter climate, it is a favourite resort for invalids. The mean temp. of the year is 59°·3, winter 44°·5, summer 75° Fahr. Frost seldom lasts over the night, and snow falls only on an average 1½ days in the year; but, in the severe season of 1812, the ponds were frozen over for several days. Rome has 354 churches, many of which are remarkable for their architecture and their decorations; of these the cathedral of St Peter's is the largest and most sumptuous in the world. It was founded in 1450, and its building occupied 176 years; it was planned and commenced by Bramante, but altered and carried on by Raphael, and Michael Angelo Buonarroti. It was dedicated 18th November 1626. Length of the cathedral 613 feet, width 296 feet, height to top of cross 434 feet. The church of St John Lateran, in which the Popes were crowned, is the mother church of Rome, and contains the gorgeous Corsini chapel. The Palace of the Vatican, adjoining St Peter's, is said to contain 4,633 halls, chapels, and other apartments; it became the permanent residence of the Popes after their return from Avignon in 1377. Its galleries and halls, and the Sistine chapel, decorated by Raphael and Michael Angelo, contain the most choice paintings and statues, including the portion of those carried off by the French, which were restored in 1815. A series of its galleries, splendidly decorated with statues and marbles, contain the famous library of the Vatican, which is estimated to comprise 30,000 printed books, though generally supposed to amount to 100,000 volumes, and 22,500 MSS in all languages. Its museum of sculpture, the richest in the world, contains among other specimens the Apollo Belvidere, the Torso, and the Laocöon. The superb palace of the Quirinal, or palace of Monte Cavallo, is surrounded by extensive gardens; attached to this is the palace called the Dataria Apostolica, whence the pontifical bulls are issued. In the square of the Quirinal is the palace of the Consistory, seat of the supreme tribunal. The palace of Belair contains the archives of Rome. In the Campidoglio, or modern capitol, forming three sides of a square, are the palace of the senator of Rome, that of the conservatori, the Capitoline museum, rich in objects of art and antiquities; between these is placed the famous bronze statue of Marcus Aurelius. There are upwards of 60 splendid private palaces; the finest of these are the Barberini palace, the Doria palace, remarkable for its extent and its gallery of paintings, the Colonna palace for its gardens, the Spagna

House and Farnese palaces, the latter celebrated for its architecture. The villas or residences of the Roman nobles in the suburbs of the city, are situated amidst orange and citron groves; they are ornamented with fountains and statues; the most magnificent of these is the villa Borgese, on the Pincian hill, outside of the Porta del Popolo, with gardens 3 miles in circuit, which were much injured during the revolution of 1849. The Villa Medici, formerly celebrated for its Venus, now belongs to the French government, and an annual exhibition of pictures by French artists is held here. Of the many scientific and literary establishments, the university of Rome has the first rank. It was founded in 1244, as a school for the canon and civil law. Succeeding Popes have enlarged and added new chairs. There are now 42 professors, and it is well attended. The chief of the others are the Roman college founded by the Jesuits, with a rich library and museums of natural history and antiquities, and a celebrated observatory; the college of the Propaganda, in which natives from all parts of the world are trained as missionaries for the spread of the Roman Catholic faith, and to which a celebrated printing establishment is attached. In the institution of the Ripa Grande 800 children are instructed in arts and trades; and there are numerous schools of painting, sculpture, and architecture. The principal academies are, that called degli Arcadi, one of the oldest and most celebrated in Europe, Acad. Archeologica, Acad. de Lincei, etc., and the academies of theology, archaeology, the Tiberina, and others. Next to the library of the Vatican, the chief public libraries are the Casanatense in the convent of Minerva, with 120,000 vols.; the Angelica library, with 24,820 printed vols., and 2,945 MSS. Besides the museums of the Vatican and the Capitol, the public collections comprise museums of anatomy, natural history, mineralogy, antiquities, and mosaics, and there are numerous and valuable private collections. Rome has at present 8 theatres, the finest of which is that of Apollo, on the Tiber, near the bridge of St Angelo, a deaf-mute institution, and numerous hospitals and benevolent institutions, orphan hospitals, and houses of industry, the chief of which are the hospitals of San Spirito, the Holy Trinity, St Louis, and St Michael. The Protestant cemetery is situated near the Pyramid of Cæsar Cestius. The chief industry of the inhabitants of Rome is connected with the production of articles of art, and the supply of the numerous artists, invalids, and other visitors; its few manufactures are confined to woollen and silk fabrics, hats, gloves, strings for musical instruments, artificial feathers, false pearls, mosaics, jewellery, trinkets, coarse glass, and pottery. Many of the population are occupied in attendance on the ecclesiastical courts. In 1848 there were in Rome 23 cardinals, 29 bishops, 124 prelates, 1,738 secular clergy, 2,488 regular clergy, and 1,748 nuns. The noble remains of ancient Rome comprise the Foro Etrusco, now the bridge of St Angelo, the Colonna Maxima, a great subterranean tunnel still in good repair, the aqueducts already mentioned, the circus of Romulus, and the circus Maximus, the coliseum, remains of the theatre of Marcellus, the pantheon, a part of the Thermae of Agrippa, those of Caracalla, Diocletian, Nerva, Titus, etc.; the triumphal arches of Titus, Constantine, and Septimius Severus; the columns of Antonine and Trajan, several Egyptian obelsids, the Roman forum, now called Campes Vascins. Rome was founded by Romulus 754 a.c. In the two centuries preceding the Christian era, its dominion extended over all the countries of the Mediterranean; its territories were further extended by the first emperors; but in the 6th century, the barbarians of the N. and E. deprived it of several provs. The city was taken by Alarie in 410, and by Genseric in 455. It passed successively under the domination of the Ostrogoths and the Emperors of the East; it was given to the Popes by Pepin and Charlemagne in the 8th century, and then became cap. of the States of the Church. From 1809 till 1814, it was cap. of the dep. Rome in the French empire under Napoleon I. In 1848, an insurrection broke out after the assassination of Count Rossi, the Pope's prime minister, 15th November; the Pope fled in disguise on the 24th. A republican form of government was attempted in 1849, when on the 8th February, the national assembly declared the Pope divested of all temporal power, but this was overturned by the intervention of a French force, which now has possession of Rome, the Pope having returned.

RUSIA (EMPIRE or), is the largest state in the world, extending in Europe, Asia, and America, between lat. 36° 20' and 71° 24' N., lon. 160° E. to 167° 59' W. Surface estimated to comprise 1/26th of the superficies of the globe, 1/7th of its land, and more than double the extent of Europe, the total area being 7,612,574 sq. m. It is but thinly peopled, the population being in 1851 (Russian estimate) 65,331,417, or including the Caucasus and Kyrgyz, 68,700,000. Capital, St. Petersburg. The Russian empire contains a greater number of distinct races than any other country, comprising Slavonians, Lettons, Germans, Caucasians, Jews, Walachians, Greeks, Persians, Indians, Samoyeds, Tartars, Tunguses, and Turks. The established religion of the empire is that of the Greek Church, which is estimated to comprise 49,000,000 of the population, Roman Catholics 7,500,000; Lutherans, Reformed Churchmen, and Moravians, 3,600,000; Mohammedans, 2,400,000; Jews, 1,500,000; Buddhists, etc., 600,000; and Armenian Catholics and Armenian Georgians, 1,000,000. It is usual to treat of the empire as divided into European, Asiatic, and American Russia, although these divisions are not officially recognised, and several of the govts., as Perm and Orenburg, are partly in Europe and partly in Asia. The relative area and population of the empire, according to the latest estimate, is given in the table page 1042. European Russia extends from the N. slope of the Caucasus Mountains, lat. 40° 30', to Lapland, lat. 70° 18' N.; and, including the kingdom of Poland, from lon. 18° to the W. slope of the Ural Mountains, gov. Perm, lon. 60° 45' E. It is bounded E. by Siberia and the Caspian Sea, S. by Asiatic Russia, the Black Sea, and the Ottoman and Austrian empires, W. by Moldavia, Austria, Prussia, the Baltic, and Sweden, and N. by Norway and the Arctic Ocean. The surface of Russia may be considered as one vast plain, enclosed by the Ural Mountains on the E., the Caucasus on the S., and partly by the Carpathians on the W. It opens to the Casplan Sea on the S.E., and the level countries of N. Germany on the W.; throughout its vast extent it does not contain a single mountain; the highest point between the Baltic and the Black Sea, near Kremenets, is 1,328 feet above the sea. The Baltic provs. have a mean elevation of 1,000 feet above the Baltic. The centre of the country is occupied by a dome-shaped elevation traversed by the Valdai hills, the average height of which is 800 to 900 feet, and the summit 1,400 feet above the sea; these sink rapidly to the S.E., where they are lost in marshes. Russia is traversed by the largest rivers in Europe; these form the great N. and S. basins, the water-parting between which is marked, not by mountains, but by slightly undulating ground; the Baltic receives the Tornea, Kemi, Uleä, Kuma, Neva, Narva, Duna, Niemen, and Vistula; the Arctic Ocean receives the Pasvig, Kola, Petchora; and, by the White Sea, the Viga, Onega, Dwina, and Mezen; the Black Sea receives the Danube, Dniester, Dnieper, Don, and Kuban; the Caspian Sea the Oural, Volga, Kuma, and Terek. In the N. of Russia there are numerous and extensive lakes; the chief are Lake Ladoga, the largest in Europe; Lake Onega, in the gov. Olonets; Lakes Saima, Pajama, and Kolys in Finland; Pelpos between the gov. Revel, Riga, Pakov, and Petersburg; Ilmen in the gov. Novgorod, and Enara in Lapland. The smaller lakes, Biele in Novgorod, Koubinskoe or Koubensk in Volodia, are important for the internal navigation of the empire. The most valuable of the salt lakes is Elton in Saratov. Among the numerous islands belonging to the empire, the chief are the group of Novaya Zemlia (new land), in the Arctic Ocean, the archipelago of Spitzbergen, which is claimed by Russia, Kalguet, and Waigatz Islands. Geological phenomena, confirmed by history and tradition, warrant the conclusion that a great portion of Central Russia was under the sea at a comparatively recent period. The soil comprises every variety, much of which is unfit for cultivation. The vast region of the tundras, extending from lat. 64° N. to the N. coast, is a swamp in summer, and is covered with ice for nine months in the year; it produces only moss. S.W. of this the country, for a space of 150,000 sq. m., is covered with forests of pine, larch, and birch. The isthmus of Finland, between the White Sea and the Gulfs of Finland and Bothnia, a space occupying 800 m. in length, and 400 in breadth, is covered with lakes interspersed with rocks and sand hills; while in the S.E. an immense desert, called a steppe, extends between the Ural and the Volga, estimated to contain 330,000 sq. m.; a portion of it affords tolerable pastures. W. of lon. 46°, a series of salt lakes occupy a hollow space, which probably once formed a portion of the Caspian Sea. This steppe is exposed to the greatest extremes of climate; in winter the thermometer is generally 15°, and sometimes 35°, below zero, while in summer the heat is upwards of 100° Fahr. From its vast extent, Russia has a great diversity of climate; the plains of the N., exposed to the winds of the Arctic Ocean, are much colder than the other countries of Europe in corresponding latitudes. The whole of the N. coast, from lat. 60° on the White Sea, S.E. to lat. 63° N., lon. 38° E., has a temperature below the freezing point, and the surface is constantly frozen. Between this frozen space and lat. 68° N., the mean temperature varies from 33° to 40°; at St Petersburg, which is within this space, the thermometer in December and January sinks to 32° below zero, while in summer it rises to 85° or 90°. S. of lat. 58° the mean temperature is between 40° and 55°; the winters are short and severe, summers long and hot. In the interior S.E. and S. winds prevail, while W. and N.W. winds are most common on the coasts. Rain is most abundant in the Baltic provs. where the average annual fall is 15 to 20 inches. The amount and frequency decrease in proceeding from W. to E., and during the long summer of the S. provs., rain very seldom falls. Snow falls early in winter,—the average number of days in the year on which snow falls at St Petersburg, is 70.

Russia produces all the plants common to the other countries of Europe. Corn is raised more than necessary for consumption, and is exported, although agriculture is in its rudest state. Rye is the chief crop, and is very widely raised; the cultivation of barley extends to lat. 67°, and oats to lat. 68° N.; wheat is grown chiefly in the Ukraine. The countries of Central Russia, in the upper basin of the Volga, are the most fertile in the empire, and its middle portion, comprising the gov. of Nijni-Novgorod, Penza, Kasan, and Simbirsk, is called the granary of Russia. Hemp and flax are raised chiefly on the Upper Volga; tobacco is cultivated principally in the Ukraine; grapes are grown in the Crimea, and on the lower courses of the Don and Volga. The forests yield valuable produce, and building timber, tar, pitch, and potash, are widely exported. Black cattle and sheep are extensively reared; tallow and hides are exported in great quantities; sheep-skins form the dress of many of the peasantry, but the wool is of inferior quality. The horses of the S. and central provs. are large, in the N. they are small, those of the Cossack tribes are capable of enduring great fatigue. Camels are kept in large herds by the nomadic tribes in the steppes, and dromedaries in the Crimea. The bison is found near the sources of the Narew; the reindeer is confined to the region N. of lat. 66° N.; the elk, wild swine, deer, and hare, are found in the forests of the N.; and the fur-bearing animals are actively hunted. In addition to the birds common to other countries of Europe, the capercaillie is found in the N., and the pelican in the S., on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas; geese and ducks abound in the lakes. Fish is plenty in the rivers, especially in the Volga and the Ural, and in the White Sea and the Sea of Azov. In the Arctic Ocean, on the shores of Novaya Zemlia, the whale and seal are fished. The E. part of Russia is rich in minerals; the two gov. of Orenburg and Perm, and especially the latter, have numerous mines of gold, platinum, and copper; silver does not occur in European Russia; iron abounds in the S. provs. In the mining districts of the Ural, the pop. is flourishing and industrious; the utmost activity is manifested, forests have been cleared, marshes drained, and the gorges of mountains have been filled with artificial lakes, water being the chief motive power. Salt is extensively made in the gov. Perm and Viatka, and in the W., south of Lake Ilmen. Lignite and brown coal occur in the Crimea, and on the W. of the Ural mountains; the coal field on the Donets is estimated at 100 m. long, and several feet deep. Coal beds of immense extent were discovered in the gov. Moscow in 1844. Since the time of Peter the Great, the progress of manufactures has been most rapid. In 1812, there were only 2,333 factories, and 119,093 workmen; in 1826, the number of factories were 5,244, and of workmen 245,414; and in 1839, there were 6,855 factories with 412,931 workmen; they are still rapidly on the Russians, and the improvements of their agriculture have been commensurate with their progress. The staple manufactures are woolens, flax, linen, cottons, metal wares, soap and candles, besides which are manufactures of glass, paper, porcelain, arms, jewellery, and morocco leather. Most of the articles used by the peasantry are made in the villages, one of which is usually devoted to a single branch of industry in the kingdom of Poland, the chief manufactures of woollens, linens, leather, and fur goods. The commerce of Russia is greatly facilitated by its numerous navigable rivers, and its vast and excellent system of canals, by means of which, not only do the Baltic and the White Sea communicate with the Caspian and the Black Sea, but the great lakes and the principal rivers are united into a complete system of inland navigation. The American Commercial Company, formed in 1707, has establishments in Russian America and at Moscow, Kazan, Tomsk, Irkutsk, and Kamtschatka. The railways completed in 1858 are 715 m. in length, the chief are from Warsaw, by Cassel and Cracow, joining the Austrian & German lines at Kosel, and that from St Petersburg to Moscow. Moscow is the centre of internal commerce; and the chief seaports are St Petersburg, with Kronstadt & Riga on the Baltic, Archangel on the White Sea, Astrakhan on the Caspian Sea, and Odessa on the Black Sea. The principal exports are tallow, hides, hemp, flax, iron, copper, haxseed, building timber, wax, potash, train oil, alum, furs, and morocco leather imports, wine, cotton, silk, fine woollens, dyes, materials, tea, sugar, coffee, and other colonial produce, and machinery. In Russia, all power emanates from the emperor or czar, who is head of the church, and whose authority is absolute, all rank is based on the tenure of civil or military office. The nobility are a privileged class, they have great political power, and possess nearly all the land of the country. European Russia is divided into 49 govts, and 12 provs, besides the country of the Don Cossacks a kind of military republic, the grand duchy of Finland, the kingdom of Poland, and several countries in the Caucasus, Siberia, etc., some of which are actually, and others only nominally, dependent on Russia. In 1861, the educational establishments comprised 6 universities, and 3 lycæums, with a total of 3,521 students, besides 2,149 secondary establishments, with 116,996 pupils, they are dependent on the government, and are placed under a minister of public instruction. In Poland there were, in the same year, 1,661 institutions, with 82,942 pupils. The military schools are under the superintendence of the emperor, and number 27 schools, with 9,604 pupils. The army of Russia is maintained at comparatively little expense; the number of effective troops was estimated, in 1862, at 1,473,242 men. In 1854 the navy comprised 4 ships of 120 guns, 6 of 100 to 110 guns, 26 of from 80 to 90 guns; 18 of from 70 to 80 guns; and 4 frigates of 60 guns; besides a large number of steamers and gun-boats, estimated by the Russians at from 400 to 500 vessels. The crews are estimated at 50,000 men, 20,000 of whom belong to the Baltic, and 19,000 to the Black Sea fleet. Several of the ships of the Black Sea fleet were sunk by the Russians in 1854, at the entrance of Novorossiysk, for the purpose of keeping out the Anglo-French fleet. In 1862, the revenue of the country, exclusive of Poland and Finland, was estimated at 254,200,000 paper rubles (25 rubles equal to 1*l.*), and in 1863, the debt was estimated at 226,575,858 rubles, but these calculations are very uncertain. Public debt in 1863, 401,000,000 silver rubles.—Great Russia is the N. and middle portion of the empire in Europe, formerly called Muscovy.—White Russia, a portion of Lithuania.—Black Russia, the W. part of do.—New Russia, a region in the S, comprising the territories of the Cossacks.—Little Russia, in the S W.—Red Russia, which till 1806, was an independent dukedom, now forms a part of Austrian & Russian Poland (Galicia & Poland). Pop. of European Russia (1863) 60,132,000. The govts. of the empire are as follows:—

Russia in Asia, embraces Siberia, or the whole of N. Asia, E. of the principal crest of the Ural Mountains [Sibirskia]; and part of the region of the Caucasus, forming the gov. of Stavropol. It is subdivided into 13 provs. and includes several regions which are only nominally subject to Russia, besides many countries which do not recognise the authority of, and are constantly at war with, that power. The entire pop. of Asiatic Russia is estimated at 6,000,708. In consequence of the invasion of the Danubian provinces by the Russians, war was declared by the Turks against Russia, and afterwards by England and France, which resulted in the invasion of the Crimea by the combined forces in 1854. [CASPIAN, CAUCASUS, DAUGHTARIAN, GEORGIA.]

Russian America, comprises the continent of N.W. Amer., W. of lon. 141° W., and a strip on the coast extending S. to lat. 55° N. bounded on the E. by British Amer., S. & W. by the Pacific, and N. by the Arctic Ocean. Pop. estimated at 64,000; and the following island groups:—Prince of Wales Island, Duke of York Archipelago, George III. Archipelago, the Kodiak Islands, and the Aleutian Islands. The principal settlement is New Archangel, a small town with 1,000 inhabitants, on the Island Sitka, the largest of the group of George III., which is called Baranov by the Russians, and was named George III. by Vancouver. It is the seat of the governor of all the establishments of Russian America, and has fortifications, magazines, and a governor's residence, all built of wood. This settlement was formed in 1847 by the "Mormons" or "Latter Day Saints," after their expulsion from the city of Nauvoo, in Illinois. Their prophet, Joseph Smith, and his brother, were murdered in the jail of Carthage by an armed mob. In the beginning of 1846, the van of the Mormons crossed the Mississippi on their journey for the western wilderness, under the guidance of Brigham Young, the successor of Joseph Smith, and after enduring great privations on their journey, in 1847 the pioneers reached the spot where they established the city, and in autumn were joined by the main body. During the winter and spring they suffered from famine, but on the arrival of harvest provisions became abundant. Large flocks of sheep and herds of cattle are reared, and, with the view of being a self-sustaining colony, beet-root is raised for the manufacture of sugar, a woollen factory has been built, besides grist-mills, cutlery and pottery manufactories. Owing to the scarcity of rain, great attention is paid to artificial irrigation, by means of reservoirs of snow, which accumulates in the gorges of the mountains, and yields never failing streams during summer. The soil is remarkably rich. The "Mormons" are zealously engaged in the task of spreading their dogmas, by a numerous staff of missionaries in all quarters of the globe, having this city as their head-quarters, and a large emigration fund has been established. As circumstances require, new cities are founded in the wilderness, to meet the wants of immigrating converts. Cedar City, 250 m. S. of the Great Salt Lake City, has been laid out in a spot having the advantage of water, good soil, wood, iron-ore, alum, and the appearance of a plentiful supply of coal. It is the design of the "Mormons" to found stations where the country will support a numerous population, to establish a line of communication with the Pacific, so as to assist their brethren on their pilgrimage to the head-quarters of the church. The "Mormons" have heavily taxed themselves for the purposes of their sect. Already have schools been built in most of the districts both in the city and country, which are well attended by old and young, with a normal school for the instruction of teachers, besides liberal assignments in money and land for the support of a university, the site of which has been laid out and enclosed, on a terrace of the mountain overlooking the city. Captain Howard Stansbury, chief of the U. S. survey corps, who resided amongst them upwards of twelve months, describes them as being "industrious, hospitable, and patriotic," in proof of which they gave, on demand, 500 men to the United States army on the occasion of the Mexican war, although they were just setting out on their pilgrimage for the wilderness. "All civil and ecclesiastical power is vested in the priests, and justice is promptly and wisely decreed; a plurality of wives is allowed." A convention of the citizens of that part of Upper California lying east of the Sierra Nevada mountains, was held at the Great Salt Lake City on 8th March 1849, and next day they adopted a constitution, to remain in force until the United States Government should otherwise provide for the government of the territory, and sent a delegate to Congress. The government has since ratified the constitution, and appointed President Young governor of the new territory.

Since 1838, the island has been divided into 3 administrative portions, Cagliari and Nuoro in the S., and Sassari in the N. These are subdivided into 11 provs., named from their chief towns—Cagliari, Bussachi, Iglesias, Isili, Lanusei, Nuoro, Sassari, Alghero, Cagliari, Ozieri, and Gallura (chief town Tempio). The island which forms a political and administrative division of the kingdom of Sardinia, and has itself the title of kingdom, is governed by a viceroy, resident at Cagliari, who is lieutenant and captain-general. Religion exclusively Roman Catholic. There are two universities, one at Cagliari, and another at Sassari. There is a primary school in each village, yet in a population of upwards of half a million, not more than 9,000 children are at school. Sardinia was colonised by the Carthaginians, from whom it was taken by the Romans in the third Punic war. On the fall of the Western Empire, it came successively under the power of the Vandals, Goths, and Moors. At the end of the 12th century, it was held by the Genoese, and afterwards by the kings of Aragon till 1718. In 1720 it was acquired by Savoy in exchange for Sicily. It was the only portion of the Sardinian dominions which was left in the power of the sovereign during the usurpation of the French from 1798 to 1814.

These islands communicate by packets with Penzance, between them and which part is a dangerous rocky ledge termed the Wolf. They have several secure roadsteads; but numerous shipwrecks have occurred on them, in one of which 3 line-of-battle ships, under Sir Cloudesley Shovel, were totally lost October 23, 1707. It presents, in some respects, a remarkable similarity to Egypt, being a plain divided by a large river, and bounded on one side by mountains, and on the other by a desert; but though fertile on the river banks, it is far inferior in productiveness, population, and civilization, to the valley of the Nile. The delta is encumbered with jungle and tall grass; and the lands bordering it are poor, destitute of fresh water, and, after the inundation, incrustated with salt. Upper Soinde is the most fertile part of the country, being irrigated by canals, and yielding rice, wheat, barley, oil-seeds, millet, opium, indigo, maize, sugarcane, cotton, pulse, and esculent vegetables, with dates, mangoes, plantains, and the fruits common to Southern Europe. Much of the country has, however, been depopulated by the Amers, and laid waste for hunting grounds. Mimosa, banyana, palms, and mangroves, are amongst the principal trees. Camels, buffaloes, sheep, goats, horses, and asses, are the domestic animals; wool is an important product, and is manufactured into bags, ropes, and strong cloths. Climate extremely sultry and dry; at Hyderabad the thermometer has been found to stand in the shade at 98° 5 Fahr., during a part of the day, for six months of the year, and epidemic diseases are frequent and destructive. Tigers, hyenas, wolves, and other formidable animals are numerous, and affigators swarm in the pools of the delta. Coarse cloths, felt, mats, arms, leather, and horse furniture, earthenware, cotton, silk, and embroidered fabrics, are made in the towns, but few manufactured goods are fitted for exportation; the exports consisting chiefly of the natural produce, rice, and other grains, ghee, hides, fish, wool, salt, and nitre from the soil, oil and oil seeds, bark, alkalies, firewood, opium, tobacco, camels and horses. Imports are chiefly manufactured goods, madder and other dyes, groceries, metals, gems, timber, cordage, bamboos, and dried fruits. Kurrachee, at the mouth of the Indus, is the chief port and seat of foreign trade. The inhabitants are partly Hindoos, partly Beloochees, and Mohammedans, the lower classes of the latter being of the soonee, and the upper or amers of the shik sect. Until lately the country was governed by the amers, who exercised an aristocratic military despotism; but after open hostilities had been evinced by them against the British, their power was completely broken by the forces under Sir C. Napier in 1844, and Soinde became a British dependency. Chief towns, Hyderabad, the cap., Shikarpoor, Khyerpoor, Kurrachee, Tattah, Meerpoor, Hella, Larkhana, and Soore.

SCIO, CHIO or EURO, CHIO, an island belonging to Turkey, off the W. coast of Asia Minor, 4 m. W. Cape Bianco, from which it is separated by the Strait of Scio. Lat. of chief town on its E. coast 38° 33' N., lon. 28° 1' E. Length N. to S. 82 m., greatest breadth 15 m. Area 508 sq. m. Surface very much diversified; it is naturally one of the richest and most beautiful islands of the Levant. Principal products, wine of superior quality, mastic, silk, wool, cheese, figs, lemons, oranges, and other fruits; less corn has usually been raised than is required for home consumption. Previously to 1832, this island was the best governed and most prosperous in the Grecian archipelago, and had thriving silk manufs., and a considerable trade with Constantinople, Syria, and Egypt; but in the above year, some of its inhabitants having joined the Samians in their revolt, nearly all the population, comprising from 120,000 to 150,000 persons, were massacred or sold into slavery by the Turks, and the buildings and plantations were for the most part destroyed. Principal town Kasro, on its E. coast. The tragic poet Ion, the historian Theopompus, the sophist Theocritus, and the philosopher Metrodorus, were natives of this island, which also claims, in opposition to Smyrna, to have been the birthplace of the Greek poet Homer.

(1801) 1,509,068, (1841) 2,620,184, (1851) 2,888,742. On the N. coast are the two large groups of the Orkney and Shetland Islands. On the W. the Hebrides or Western Isles, running N. to S. from ¼ mile to 50 miles from the coast. This group comprises the Lewis and Harris, North and South Uist, Skye, Mull, Jura, Islay, etc. The coast line has an aggregate length of 2,506 m.; and on the W. arms of the sea penetrate inland, forming Loch Long, between Argyll and Dumbarton shires, Loch Fyne and Loch Linnhe in Argyllshire, and Loch Eil in Inverness-shire. In Ross-shire Lochs Carron, Torridon, Gair, Ewe, Greinord, Broom, and Egnard. In Sutherlandshire Lochs Assynt and Laxford. In addition to these there are innumerable inland fresh water lochs. On the E. the indentations are called friths, comprising the Forth, Tay, Moray, and Dornoch; and on the W. coast is the Frith of Clyde, which is of great commercial importance. The Atlantic and North Sea are connected by the Caledonian Canal: Loch Fyne and the Atlantic by the Crinan Canal, and the rivers Forth and Clyde by the Forth and Clyde Canal. There are numerous headlands and promontories on the coast, the chief of which are St Abb's Head, Berwickshire; Fifeness, a low sandy headland, is the termination of the peninsula of Fife; Buddleness, in Forfarshire, with a lighthouse; Girdleness, with a lighthouse, at the mouth of the Dee, in Kincardineshire; Buchanness, with a lighthouse, in Aberdeenshire, and the most easterly land in Scotland, and Kinnaird Head, also with a lighthouse, at the entrance of Moray Frith; Tarbetness, with a lighthouse, on a peninsula between the Dornoch and Beaulie Friths, in Ross-shire; Clyth Ness, Noss Head, Holborn Head, Duncansby Head, & Dunnet Head, the latter with a lighthouse, in Caithness; Strathely Point, Whiten Head, Far-out Head, Assynt Point, & Cape Wrath, with a lighthouse, in Sutherlandshire; the Mull of Kintyre, with a lighthouse, at the entrance to the Clyde, besides Toward and Clough Points, with lighthouses, on the Clyde; Corsewall Point, with a lighthouse, at the N.W. extremity of the Rhins of Galloway; Mull Head and the Mull of Galloway, the last with a lighthouse, are in Wigtonshire, besides numerous other headlands. The chief rivers are the Tweed, Forth, Tay, North and South Esk, Dee, Don, Spey, Deveron, Lossie, Findhorn, Ness, Conon, Erora, Wick, and Helmsdale, on the eastern side; the Nith, Annan, Dee, Cree, Ayr, Doone, and Clyde, on the S. and W. The principal harbours and piers on the E. coast are Berwick, Leith, Granton, Burntisland, Grangemouth, and the roadsteads of Inchkeith and St Margaret's Hope; on the N.E. Dundee and Aberdeen; and on the W. Greenock and Glasgow. Mountains are numerous: the Grampian range commences with Ben Nevis, in the S.W. corner of Inverness-shire, and extends in a N.E. direction, intersecting the country to near the E. shores of Aberdeenshire, with branches stretching S. to the Tay, and N. and N.W. to the shores of the Moray Frith. The Grampians, with their offshoots, form an extensive mountain chain, with elevations varying from 4,968 to 8,000 and 2,000 feet in elevation above the sea. The valley of the Caledonian Canal separates this region from the mountainous district of Sutherlandshire, which terminates at Cape Wrath. On the S., bordering on England, are the Cheviot hills, rising to 2,684 feet, in the S.E. the Lammermoors; in Dumfriesshire Queensberry hill, 2,140 feet, the Lowthers, 3,100 feet, Hartfell, 2,635 feet, and in Peeblesshire Dollar Law, 2,790 feet, above the sea. The geological formation of the country comprises granite, porphyry, primary schists, marble, and quartz rock, with occasionally metallic veins, while the old red sandstone formation fills up the valleys and the coast line on each side N. and S. of the Grampian mountains, extending, with the exception of the E. part of Aberdeenshire, along the whole coasts of Scotland, both E. and W. sides, from the Tay and Clyde N.wards. The middle portion of Scotland from St Andrews to St Abb's Head, and in corresponding lines westward to Dumbarton, comprehends the great coalfield of the country, intersected by the greenstone ranges of the Ochil hills on the N., and the Lanarkshire hills, Pentlands, and Fife Lomonds, in the centre. Another coal district extends also into Berwickshire and part of Roxburgh, while the whole region from the Lammermoor range S. and W. into Peebles, Dumfriesshire, and Wigtonshire, is composed of the lower Silurian or greywacke formation. Limestone and ironstone are found in the coal districts, lead ore in the Greywacke districts of Leadhills, silver in the Ochil hills, with lead, antimony, and manganese in the primary range of the Grampians. Traces of oolitic strata are found in the North and in the Western Islands. Temperature in the W. and S. parts mild, but humid: the central elevated regions chill and humid; the eastern plains and Lowlands more genial, though exposed in spring to chill easterly winds. In the Lowlands the summer is not so hot, but the winter is, on the whole, milder than that of England, and the climate is reckoned salubrious, and favourable to longevity. The following table exhibits the temperature of several localities:—

	Mean of winter	Mean of summer	Mean of year.	Rain in inches.
Edinburgh, . .	Dec. 39.4	Dec. 57.3	Dec. 47.1	24.
St. Andrews, . .	39.3	56.9	48.1	27.5
Aberdeen, . .	38.0	55.1	46.5	27.0
Glasgow, . .	39.4	56.4	47.7	25.0
Inverness, . .	38.0	57.0	47.5	27.0
Glasgow, . .	39.4	56.1	47.8	25.5
Firth (London), .	37.5	57.3	47.4	25.5

Mean annual temperature of mainland 47° 9 Fahr. Prevailing winds W. and S.W.: in spring N. and N.E. Most rain falls on the W. coasts. The central W., and N.W., districts are chiefly grazing and pastoral, the valleys and plains of the E. and S. districts agricultural. The alluvial, or carse lands of Stirling, Falkirk, and Gowrie, the plains of the Lothians and Clydesand Baff. In the island of Barra fully one-half of the population is Roman Catholic. Episcopalians are now most numerous in the districts where Episcopacy at one time predominated—Inverness-shire, and the neighbouring district of Strathairn, the south-east of Ross-shire, in Fort-William and Appin, and in the vicinity of Dunkeld. There has been no bishop of Caithness and Orkney since 1762. Irish immigration has greatly increased the number of Roman Catholics in the large towns. In 1831 the number of public day-schools was 3,342, with 281,045 scholars; private day-schools, 1,893, with 88,472 scholars. Of these there were supported by the Established Church 914 schools and 62,539 scholars; by the Reformed Presbyterian Church, 2 schools and 355 scholars; by the United Presbyterian Church, 61 schools and 5,807 scholars; by the Free Church, 719 schools and 68,041 scholars; by the Episcopal Church, 38 schools & 2,864 scholars; by Independents, 4 schools & 424 scholars; by Baptists, 1 school and 167 scholars; and by Roman Catholics, 32 schools and 5,673 scholars. As the educational census is confessedly made up of loose estimates and imperfect returns, its statements cannot be relied on; and it is evidently a great exaggeration to suppose that 1 in 7 of the population is in attendance at school. The Gaelic language still prevails in the Hebrides and in the west and inland parts of Argyll, Inverness, Ross, and Sutherland shires; but it is rapidly receding from the lowland borders. The old Scottish language is a cognate Teutonic dialect; it is now generally superseded by the modern English; though it will live in the works of Ramsay, Burns, and Scott. Scotland, previously an independent kingdom, was joined to England in 1603, on the accession of James VI., and a legislative union of the two kingdoms took place in 1707. By this treaty 16 peers, elected from the whole body of Scottish peers, represented the country in the House of Lords; and the counties returned 30 and the boroughs 15 members to the House of Commons. In 1832 the borough members were increased to 23. The elective franchise nearly corresponds to that of England. [BRITAIN.]

Its hospital was occupied by the Anglo-French army in 1854-6. It is the great rendezvous for caravans from Asia trading to Constantinople, and between it and Chalcedon; 14 m. The great harbour or inlet, on the S. side of which the town is situated, extends 4½ miles from W. to E. into the interior of the land, with an average breadth of half a mile, and is so enclosed by calcareous hills as to conceal the masts of the largest vessels. In ordinary times this is the station of the Russian Black Sea fleet, and the great school of marine exercise. At a right angle to the great harbour, the South Bay runs 1½ m. from N. to S., and to the W. of it, Artillery Bay runs about ½ a mile in the same direction; between these bays the town rises in the form of an amphitheatre. The principal buildings, commencing at the shore, are, the house built for the reception of the Empress Catherine II. in 1787, and behind it the admiralty, arsenal, and offices of the marine. In the upper part are the houses of the inhabitants, markets, and a Greek church. The hospitals, barracks, and stores, are mostly on the E. side of South Bay, while the quarters of the artillery and the quarantine station are in Artillery Bay. By a special ukase, Russians alone are permitted to reside within its walls. Jews and Tartars are expressly excluded. The South Bay is used for arming and discharging vessels, and for mooring the hulks for prisoners employed in the arsenal. Beyond this on the E. is the Bay of Careenage, with accommodation for 3 ships of the line, and 2 frigates. The chief defences are, Fort Constantine, the Quarantine Fort, Fort Nicholas, and Fort Alexander. The 4 forts are built of limestone, faced with granite and porphyry, composed of 3 tiers of batteries, and having each 250 or 300 pieces of artillery. The harbour is infested with myriads of the worm teredo navalis, which attaching itself to the vessels, pierces their timbers, and renders them unfit for service in two or three years. In order to escape this destruction, the government resolved to fill the docks with fresh water, for which purpose vast canals, to convey the water of the Tcherenal from the S. of Inkerman, were carried on and nearly completed, when it was discovered that the water of this muddy stream was the source of the scourge. The site of Sevastopol, previously occupied by the old vill. of Astiar, was chosen by the Empress Catherine in 1787. The harbour was long in a very inefficient state, till improved, since 1830, by an English engineer. The unfinished works have already cost upwards of 12,000,000 rubles. The Anglo-French army took up its position on the plateau between Sevastopol and Balaklava, and commenced the bombardment of the former on 17th October 1854.

SEVERN, one of the principal rivers of England and Wales, rises in Montgomeryshire, in a small lake on the E. side of Plinlimmon 1,500 feet above the sea, flows at first generally N. E. until it enters England, and then successively S. E. and S. through Shropshire, Worcestershire, & Gloucestershire, and between Somersetshire and S. Wales, to its expansion into the Bristol Channel, 12 m. S. W. Bristol. Total length estimated at 210 m. Principal affs., the Teme, Lupper and Lower Avon, Leyden, Chilt, and Frouse from the E., and the Teme, Wye, Lsk., and Taff, from the W., many of which pour themselves into its estuary. From Newtown it has a total descent of 465 feet to the sea. It traverses a fertile country, and is navigable from the sea to Welshpool, a distance of nearly 180 m. Barges ascend it as high as Berdley, but its navigation is both tedious and difficult, to obviate which a canal 16½ m. in length, has been cut from Gloucester to the sea, and is navigable for vessels of 750 tons. From Welshpool to Newtown, its navigation is continued by the Montgomery Canal, and other canals connect it with the Thames, Trent, Mersey, and most other rivers of Central England. Four weirs or locks, between Stourport and Digby, near Worcester, have been constructed. The tide, here termed the ogre or ore, rushes into the Severn with such violence, that the stream sometimes rises suddenly 9 feet in height at Gloucester, and extensive embankments have accordingly been formed below that city, to obviate the effects of its irruption. The tide is perceptible in the Severn as far as Digby, below Worcester, 180 m. from its mouth. At its junction with the Bristol Channel, the Severn is 10 miles across, and drains about 6,000 sq. miles. The vessels engaged in the Shropshire trade are from 30 to 40 tons burden, in the lower parts of the river they range from 100 to 140 tons, and by far the greater part of the commerce is carried on between Gloucester and the sea. Tolls received in 1847 by the Severn commission on account of improvements, 12,837*l*.

SEVILLA or SEVILLA, Hispalis, a city of Spain, and its cap during a part of the Gothic dynasty, cap prov., on l. b. of the Guadalquivir, here crossed by a bridge of boats communicating with its suburb Triana, 60 m N. N. E. Cadix. Lat.

(La Giralda) 37° 32' 44" N., lon. 6° 0' 59" W.

Pop. (1857) 163,000. Is surrounded by Moorish walls about 8 m in circuit, having gates and towers, and the ramparts forming public walks, its interior has almost wholly an oriental appearance. The cathedral, a structure of the 14th and 15th centuries, occupies the site of a mosque, and is 400 feet in length by 283 feet in breadth, and has a square tower 347 feet in height and surmounted by a colossal bronze statue of Faith. The interior is richly adorned, though many of its treasures were removed by the French and it has numerous chapels, pictures by Murillo, and other great artists, organs, and the tomb in which the remains of Columbus now in the cathedral of Havana, island of Cuba were first deposited. Around this edifice are the archbishop's palace, the chapter house the alcasar, and the exchange, in which are the archives of Spanish America. The Alcazar a royal palace and gardens constructed in imitation of the Alhambra at Granada, contains the "court of Lions," hall of ambassadors, royal apartments, with many fine paintings and dwellings which are let out to private individuals or for lodging houses. Before the French revolutionary invasion, Sevilla is reported to have contained 140 parish churches, besides numerous convents, most of which are now converted to other purposes, and in 1845 it had only 31 churches. The royal tobacco and cigar factory employs 3,000 hands, chiefly females. Other principal buildings, are 29 monasteries, 86 convents, 11 hospitals, the city hall, barracks, prisons, theatres, the cannon foundry, arsenal, and in the centre of the city the bullring, capable of containing 14,000 spectators. The Torre d'Oro is an octagon tower, probably of Roman construction, a Roman aqueduct still conveys water to the city from Alesla, and here are other remains of classic antiquity. On one side is the Quemadero, or "burning place of the Inquisition," near which is a large cemetery, and an English burying-ground. The suburb Triana, beyond the river, is inhabited chiefly by gipsies and smugglers, and near it is a Moorish dam erected to prevent the effects of inundations, to which the lower parts of the city are liable. Sevilla is the residence of a captain-general, and the seat of a royal audience, and of a university establishment in what was formerly a Jesuit college, and to which and the city museum are many paintings. It has a lyceum, and other public schools, and scientific associations. Manufactures of silks, wools, and linen cloths, hats, combs, soap, and earthenware, leather factories, government iron foundries, and nitro factories, an active fishery in the river, a coasting trade, and exports of oranges, olives, and off, extensively raised in the vicinity. The Guadalquivir is navigable up to the city for vessels of 100 tons burden; ships drawing more than 10 feet water load and unload 8 m. below the city. Chief imports are manufactured goods from England, hides, hemp, and flax from the Baltic, iron from Bilbao, and colonial produce from Cuba, etc. The Goths removed their capital from Sevilla to Toledo in the 6th century. The city was taken by the Moors in 711, and by Frederick II. in 1247, after which, until the time of Philip V., it was the chief residence of the Spanish monarchs. The French took it in 1810 and again in 1823. A few miles distant, on the W., is the village Santa Ponce, the ancient Italica, the birth-place of the emperors Trajan, Hadrian, and Theodosius the Great, and where are the remains of a Roman amphitheatre, and other vestiges of antiquity. Santa Ponce and Triana are the seats of large annual fairs.

Mainland, in the S.W., comprises about half the area, and more than half the entire pop., together with Lerwick and Scalloway, the only towns in the group. Other islands are Yell, Unst, Fetlar, Whalsay, Bressay, East and West Barra, Papa-Stour, Foula, the most N. (and conjectured to be the Ultima Thule of the ancients), and Fair Isle, intermediate between Shetland and Orkney. Shores rocky, and greatly indented with inlets, especially in Mainland. Climate very damp and variable, but snow or frost seldom lasts long in winter, at which season the aurora borealis is highly brilliant; night is scarcely known during May, June, and July. Gneiss, mica-schist, hornblende, and other slate, serpentine, and primitive limestone, are the principal rocks. Surface generally mountainous, covered with heath, destitute of trees; and the valleys in Mainland, which all extend N. and S., are interspersed with many small lakes. Soil mostly light gravelly, and less productive than that of Orkney. Unst is the most fertile island. Agriculture is in a backward condition; the surface is chiefly appropriated to rearing live stock, though some potatoes, turnips, and oats are raised. Bearmeat, oatmeal, fish, and potatoes, constitute most part of the food of the people, who appear to be, as to their condition and education, in superior circumstances to the population of the N. portion of the mainland of Scotland. They are chiefly of Norwegian descent, and their ancestors are said not to have embraced Christianity until the 13th century. The islands form a synod of the Scotch church, and, together with Orkney, they send 1 member to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1848) 174. Scandinavian antiquities are numerous in the islands, and on Fetlar are the vestiges of a Roman camp. [NEW SOUTH SHETLAND.]

Pop. estimated (in 1854) at 6,000,000, comprising 1,900,000 Siamese, 1,500,000 Chinese, 1,000,000 Malays, and 1,000,000 Laos. The Menam River traverses its centre from N. to S., and by annual inundations, renders the great plain extremely fertile, the other principal river is the Mekong, and numerous tributaries. On the W. and E. Siam proper is separated respectively from the Tenasserim coast, by lofty mountain chains. The kingdom comprises the W. half of Cambodia, the isthmus connecting the Malay peninsula with the Asiatic continent, and the N. and middle portion of the peninsula, the states of which are tributary to Siam. Climate salubrious in the plains, but subject to fatal fevers in the mountainous districts. Mean temperature of the year at Bangkok 83° Fahr. The S.W. monsoon brings abundant rain, the N.E. is dry and healthy. Chief products, comprise rice, sugar, pepper, tobacco, coconuts, sago, tropical fruits, teak, sandal, sapan, rose and other woods, coffee, cotton, rattans, and gums, copper raised by Chinese miners is the chief mineral produced, lead, antimony, and zinc, iron and gems, are also found. The elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, buffalo, leopard, antelope, and bear, abound, serpents and crocodiles are numerous. The Siamese or Thai are of the Mongolian family, are of a mild and humane disposition, and remarkable for cleanliness and order. Buddhism is the state religion. The French Jesuits founded missions in 1663, and have a seminary and other schools in the capital, where American Protestant missionaries print and circulate the Bible in the Siamese and Chinese languages. They have made little progress in useful or ornamental arts, and most of the manufactures and handicrafts in the towns are carried on by Chinese or Annamese settlers. There are few roads in the country; but a navigable canal connects the Menam and Menam-kong rivers. Trade with China, Java, and Singapore, is considerable. Government an absolute monarchy, but the late king who died, 1851, was an enlightened monarch, who trained his troops in the European manner, made canals and roads, built ships, introduced steamers, encouraged arts and commerce, and established printing from types, which was unknown till 1825. The kingdom is divided into 41 provinces, bearing the names of their chief towns. There is no standing army but every male subject is liable to serve for a portion of the year. A numerous force of war-junks and galleys is kept up, and manned by Chinese and other foreigners. The first connection between this state and the British Govern-along took place in 1835, when the Siamese envoys to Louis XIV. of France, visited London and concluded a treaty with Charles II., but little intercourse took place till 1831, when a new treaty was attempted. This was interrupted by the Burmese war in 1834, but concluded in 1836, since which time amicable relations have been maintained.—The Gulf of Siam between lat. 7° and 14° N., lon. 98° and 106° E., is wholly surrounded by Siam, except on the S., where it opens into the China Sea. Length 600 m.; breadth at entrance 300 m. It receives the Menam and several other rivers, and being exempt from hurricanes, shipwrecks are very rare.

SIBERIA, SIBIR or ASIA-TIC RUS-SIA, comprises all the N. part of Asia, extending from the Ural mountains to the Pacific Ocean and Behring Straits, and having S. the Chinese empire and independent Turkistan, and N. the Arctic Ocean, in which it comprises the islands of New Siberia. Area estimated at 6,503,250 sq. m., and pop at 2,937,000. The cold of winter is extreme, while the summer heat is excessive, mean temperature of Jan. at Yakutsk, 45° S.; do. of July 68° F. Fahr. Surface in the S. elevated by the Altai chain, covered with forests, and interspersed with many fertile valleys; but by far the greater portion of Siberia is flat and sterile. In the W. are extensive steppes, inhabited by Cossack tribes, or roving Kirghiz, and all the E. half is a vast desert peopled by Ostiaks, Yakuts, Tchukchis, and other tribes in the lowest state of barbarism. The Obi, Yenisei, and Lena rivers, with their large and numerous tributaries, and the Olenek, Indighirka, and Kolyma traverse the country in a N. direction, and enter the Arctic Ocean. Principal lakes are those of Baikal, Tschany, and Banny, with the Balkash-Nor or Lake Tenghis, which forms a part of its S. boundary. In the more depopulated districts, corn sufficient for the pop. is raised; it is chiefly barley, oats, and buck-wheat. Cattle are numerous in some parts, and in the N. rein-deer, foxes, martens, beavers, and bears, the skins of which compose important articles of trade. Siberia is, however, chiefly valuable to Russia, on account of its minerals. Total produce of gold from the Altai mountains; in 1837, 40,303 pounds = 17,689 lbs. troy, value 900,000. In 1846, 1,596.55 pounds = 69,985 lbs. troy, value 3,416,437. Total amount in ten years previous to 1844, 18,761,910. The government has recently resumed the monopoly of the gold-washings. Antimony, cobalt, mercury, and zinc, are also met with; iron and copper are plentiful on the S. frontier in the gov. Tobolsk. Minerals are insignificant, except in some of the provincial caps. Irkutsk has an imperial factory of woollens for the clothing of the troops, and some manufactures of linens, glass, hats, soap, etc., and it is the great entrepôt of the commerce of N.E. Asia, receiving from Kuchta on the Chinese frontier, tea, rhubarb, fruit, paper, silks, and porcelain. Tobolsk has tanneries, and manufactures of soap and felt. W. Siberia consists of the govts. Tobolsk and Tomsk; E. Siberia of Yenisei and Irkutsk, the prov. Yakutsk; districts of Okhotsk and Kamtschatka, and the Tchukchei country. The govts. are organized and governed like those in European Russia; the army of Siberia consists of 40,000 men. The country is colonised not only by criminals, but also by vagabonds and serfs considered dangerous to their masters. These are collected at Moscow, from all parts of the empire, and sent off in weekly convoys, to the number of about 10,000 per annum; one-fifth of whom die in ten years, from fatigue of the journey and change of climate. Arrived in Siberia, they are divided into three classes.—1st, For forced labour in the mines; 2d, Public labour (to be afterwards established, provisionally, as colonists); 3d, Those destined for immediate colonization. These observe the rites of the Greek Church. Among the aboriginal population in the west of Siberia, from the northern Ural to the rivers Irtysh and Tobol, Shamanism, more or less mixed with impure Christianity, prevails. Between the Obi and the Yenisei, in the Government of Tobolsk, Shamanism prevails in the north, among the Samoyeds, and the imperfect Christianity of the Greek Church in the south, among the Ostiaks. In the eastern portion of Siberia, from the Yenisei to Kamtschatka, and from the Arctic Ocean to the Chinese empire, Baidhism, Paganism, and an imperfect Christianity prevail. The S.W. of Siberia, including the governments of Omsk, Tomsk, and part of Irkutsk, falls within the limits of the great Turkish branch of the human family, and the prevalent form of religion is Mohammedanism. Siberia has a few educational establishments, still in their infancy. In the four governments, Tobolsk, Tomsk, Yenisei, and Irkutsk, there are three gymnasia. In 1850, a ukase decided that in those of Tobolsk and Tomsk, the study of Greek should be replaced by that of the Tartar language, at the option of the student. The Old and New Testaments have been translated into the Mongolian language by the London Missionary Society. Chief cities, Tobolsk and Irkutsk respectively, the W. and E. caps., with Omsk, Tomsk, Krasnoyarsk, Yakutsk, Kishita, Semipalatinsk, and Petropavlovsk. A line of fortified posts protects the country on the side of independent Turkistan. [NEW SIAMMA—RUSSIA.]

Strait" of the kingdom of the "Two Sicilies." Shape triangular, length E. to W. 183 m., greatest breadth 120 m. Pop. (1836) 2,231,020. Its old divisions into Val Demone, Val di Noto, and Val di Mazzara, are now obsolete, and it is subdivided into the following provs. or intendencies.

Province	Area in sq. m.	Pop. 1851	Cs. of Comm.
Palermo, . . .	1,948	614,717	Palermo
Catania, . . .	1,277	243,974	Catania
Trapani, . . .	1,350	184,909	Trapani
Messina, . . .	1,128	167,791	Messina

The Neptunian or Madonian mtns., stretching from E. to W. through the N. part of the island, consist of granite, quartz, and mica, flanked, as in the Apennines, by limestone and other calcareous formations; they rise to several thousand feet above the sea, and cover a great part of the surface with their ramifications. In some parts are mtns. isolated from the rest, the chief of which is Mount Etna, near the E. coast, 10,874 feet above the sea. The principal plains border the sea, and are those of Catania and Syracuse in the E., that adjoining Trapani in the W., and those of Messina, and Terranova. Rivers all small and un-navigable; the chief are the Giarretta, watering the plain of Catania, the Salso, Platani, Belici, flowing to the S. coast. The chief lakes are Biviere or Lentini, near the E. coast, and the pool of Etna in the centre of the isl. Soil everywhere of high fertility, in some places it consists of a rich loam from 30 to 30 feet deep. Climate generally salubrious, except in some of the low lands. Mean temperature at Catania, year 67°.4, winter 53°.3, summer 84°.5; at Palermo, year 61°.1, winter 51°.5, summer 74°.4 Fahr. Summer heats are oppressive during the prevalence of the sirocco, snow is never seen, except on Etna, and the highest points of the Madonian mountains; and the cold of winter is never so severe as to affect the verdure of the country; hail-storms are frequent but rain is deficient.

The papyrus, sugar-cane, date palms, and other tropical products ripen at a height of 600 feet; evergreens flourish at 2,000 feet, oak and chestnut woods cover the mountain sides to the height of 4,000 feet, wheat thrives at 4,600 feet, and beech woods prevail to 6,000 feet in elevation. Under the Romans, the island of Sicily was considered the granary of Italy, but owing to oppressive exactions and restrictions, there are few countries in which agriculture is so unscientifically conducted. The Indian fig, a species of cactus, grows wild in profusion. Lands chiefly belong to the nobility, the clergy, or the crown. Wheat and barley are exported in small quantities.

Other chief crops are beans, pulse, maize, rice, olive oil, oranges, lemons, almonds, and other fruits, potatoes, tobacco, flax, hemp, sumach, liquorice, and manna. Silk is produced chiefly in the N.E. part of the island, and woven at Catania; in the W. 30,000 pipes of wine are annually made, of which from 18,000 to 20,000 are exported by English and other merchants at Marsala. Pastoral industry receives little attention, and except a few merino sheep, and good mules, all kinds of live stock are very inferior.

The sulphur beds of Sicily are of great value; they extend over the centre and the S., in an area of 2,700 sq. m., in which about 160 mines are wrought, some at Riesi by an English company, with workmen from Great Britain. The sulphur is found in tertiary formations, and the increase in its production within a few years had been so rapid, that in seven months of 1838, nearly 77,800 tons were yielded, and this branch of industry employed 12,300 men and boys. In 1838, a monopoly in the export of sulphur was granted by the Neapolitan government to a French mercantile firm, which resulted in such a diminution in the general trade of Sicily, that after a vigorous remonstrance from the British Government, it was quashed in 1842, and trade is again on the increase. Alum, nitre, salt, bitumen, gypsum, and marble, are valuable mineral products; ores of copper, lead, iron and mercury are found in the mtns., but few mines are wrought there, and nearly all metallic goods are imported. The tunny, sword-fish, and anchovy fisheries are important, and those of Palermo lately employed from 900 to 1,000 boats, and 3,500 fishermen. The coral fishery on the African coast is frequented by many fishermen from Trapani, where the coral procured is polished. Silk manufs. at Catania, Palermo, and Messina, employ several hundred looms; and in the same cities hides and skins are dressed. At Trapani are some cotton factories wrought by steam; other manufs. are unimportant. Chief exports, sulphur, olive oil, oranges, and lemons, wine and spirits, sumach, silks, and corn, berries, essences, salted fish, linseed, manna, rags, and skins. Imports sugar and other colonial produce, cotton and other manufactured goods, hides, iron, deals, and wax. Messina, Palermo, Trapani, and Catania, are the chief seats of commerce.

Each intendency is governed by a prefect, with a council and secretary. Each town has its judicial court; superior courts are held in Palermo.

Messina, old Catania; and a supreme court sits in Palermo, the cap. Except about 33,000 inhabitants of Greek descent, mostly near Palermo, and several thousand Jews, the inhabitants are all Roman Catholics. In 1839 there were 688 monasteries in the island. Education is chiefly in the hands of the clergy, and is said to be better conducted than in Naples. Palermo and Catania have universities; there are colleges and academies in 21 towns, and a primary and secondary school in each commune. In Catania there are schools of mutual instruction. This island was, in ancient times, the seat of many flourishing Greek colonies, of which Syracuse and Agrigento were the most famous. It fell successively under the Carthaginians, Romans, Goths, Greek emperors, Saracens, Normans, French, Spaniards, etc. It was annexed to Naples in 1736. In 1847, 1848, and 1849, unsuccessful attempts were made by the Sicilians to shake off the Neapolitan government. Messina was bombarded and taken by the Neapolitan troops 7th September 1848, and Catania 6th April 1849. [NAPLES.]

Acre, on the E. part of a peninsula about 1 m. in length, which in antiquity was the insular site of the famous maritime city of Tyre. In 1637, it suffered from a severe earthquake, by which its walls and buildings were greatly dissipated, and its pop. reduced to about 5,000, of whom one-half are Christians, and the other Turks. It appears to have no remarkable edifice; but on the peninsula are the ruins of a large Greek cathedral, and various traces of ancient structures, with some cisterns, apparently connected with extensive water-works, and an aqueduct at Ras-el-Ain, on the mainland, about 2 m. distant. Its port, on the N. side of the artificial isthmus formed by Alexander the Great during his memorable siege of Tyre, is now so choaked, as to be unfit for any but small vessels; and the trade of this ancient emporium of the East has now dwindled to small exports of tobacco, cotton, charcoal, and fuel.

Pop. 130,000. It has a government house, a mint, and large storehouses. Its harbour is the best in Java, and defended by many forts and batteries; and here are ship-building docks, a naval arsenal, and a cannon foundry. It is the seat of a civil court, and court-martial, with appeal to the supreme court in Batavia. In its province are the ruins of Mojopahit, the former cap. of Java.

BOUTHAMPTON (COUNTY OF) SOUTHAMPTON-SHIRE, HAMPSHIRE or HANTS, a maritime co. of England, having S. the English Channel, with its inlets Spithead, the Solent, etc., E. Sussex and Surrey, N. Berkshire, and W. Wilts and Dorset. Area, including the Isle of Wight, 1,625 sq. m., or 1,040,000 ac. of which 900,000 are estimated to be under culture. Pop. 405,370. The ranges of the N. and S. downs traverse the co., being on the W. offsets from the table-land of Salisbury Plain, and on the E. continuous with the downs of Sussex and Surrey. In the S. are the extensive bays Southampton-water and the harbours of Portsmouth and Langston, with the leases of Portsea and Hayling. The S.W. division of the co. is mostly occupied by the New Forest. In other parts are the forests of Bêre, Alice Holt, Woolmer, etc., and most parts of the co. are well wooded. A long and narrow strip is enclosed by the co. Sussex. In the N.N.E. and S.W. are extensive heathlands well generally well cultivated. Principal rivers, the Anton, Itchen, Avon, and Stour. All the usual crops are raised; hops are cultivated on the E. border, near Fareham; large quantities of cider are made, and the bacon of the co. is in repute. Markets, except those connected with the dockyard and shipping establishments at Portsmouth, are of little importance.

Some silks are made at Overton; paper, sacking, shagreen, bookbinding, druggists, hatters, and other woollen stuffs, chiefly in the N., and salt from pans at Lynton. Emsworth, on the border of Sussex, has some famous oyster beds.
The Basingstoke Canal is in the N.E., and the co. is interested by the London and South-Western Railway, with several branches, and the South Coast Railway, terminating at Portsmouth.
Trade centres chiefly at Southampton and Portsmouth. The co. is subdivided into 39 hundreds, and is included in the circuit and diocese of Winchester, the ep.; besides which it contains the par. bor. Southampton, Portsmouth, Christchurch, Lynton, Petersfield, and the market towns Gosport, Alresford, Alton, Basingstoke, Fordingbridge, Lynton, Christchurch, Romsey, and Ringwood. The co. sends 4 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors in 1846, for N. division, 3,411; S. division 5,812; total, 9,223.
The ruined city of Silchester in the N., Porchester with its ancient castle in the S., and Carisbrooke Castle, in the Isle of Wight, are amongst its principal antiquities, besides those in Winchester, the ancient cap. of the kingdom Wessex, and of England during the Saxon, Norman, and early Plantagenet dynasties.

SOUTHAMPTON, a par. and munic. bor., seaport town, and co. of England, in the S. part of the co.
Hants, occupying a peninsula between the mouths of the Test and Itchin rivers, at the head of Southampton-water, 12 m. S.S.W. Winchester, on the South-Western Railway, 72 m. S.W. London. Lat. of St Michael's spire, 50° 54' N., lon.
1° 24' 2" W. Area of bor. and co. 1,970 ac. Pop.
35,303. Its main street, upwards of 1 mile in length, is separated into two parts by the Bar-gate, a portion of the ancient walls, which still partially encloses the old town. Over the Bar-gate is the tow-hall; other principal structures are several parish churches, the audit and custom houses, theatre, public baths, two sets of assembly rooms, dock company's office, railway station, three piers, and the cavalry barracks.
The suburbs are extensive. The town is well supplied with water from a large Artesian well on Southampton common. Public institutions comprise the free grammar school, an hospital, numerous almshouses and other charities, a royal humane society, mechanics' literary and polytechnic institutions, an infirmary, botanic garden, and the surveying and engraving departments of the ordnance board. The new docks, on the E. of the town, opened in 1842, have an area of 208 acres, and admit steamers of above 700 tons burden. The West India, Mediterranean, East India, and China mails, have their station here, and the town communicates by steamers with all the ports of the south of England, the Channel Islands, Ireland, and by railway with London, and all the centre of England.
The port extends from near Portsmouth to Christchurch. Registered shipping of port (1847) 4,966 tons. Here are some manufs. of silks and carpets, but ship-building and general commerce are the chief sources of wealth. Southampton is a place of fashionable resort in summer. The bor. is divided into 5 wards, and governed by a mayor, 10 aldermen, and 30 councillors. It has annual races and regatta. The bor. sends 2 members to House of Commons. Reg. electors (1846) 2,268. Southampton appears to have risen on the decline of the ancient Clausentum, at Bittern, on the estuary of the Itchin; and in Saxon times it had a castle, of which, however, little, if any portion, now remains.—Southampton water is a fine inlet, stretching from the Solent and Spithead, N.W., into the interior of Hampshire for about 11 m.; greatest breadth about 3 m. It bounds the New Forest hundreds on the E., and receives the Anton, Itchin, and Hamble rivers. Its shores are picturesque, and it is usually covered with shipping.

lat. 62° and 68° N., lon. 80° and 87° W. Coasts forms its S. extremity. It is conjectured to be a collection of islands, but its interior is unexplored.

SOUTH AUSTRALIA, a British colony, between lon. 132° and 141° E., and the Southern Ocean and lat. 26° S., comprising an area of 300,000 sq. m., or 192,000,000 ac. The coast line, which is more indented than in any other part of Australia, extends about 1,500 miles from N.V. to S.E., embracing Spencer and St Vincent Gulf, with York Peninsula and Kangaroo Island. The surface of the colony is mostly undulating or level. The mountain ranges stretch generally from N. to S. The chief of these are the Gawler Range, extending from Streaky Bay to the head of Spencer Gulf, with a maximum elevation of 2,000 feet; Flinders Range, running in a northerly direction from the head of Spencer Gulf; and the parallel ranges of Bernard and Gouger. Mount Bryant, the most elevated summit E. of St Vincent Gulf, rises to the height of 3,012 feet. The table-land in Eyre Peninsula, W. of Spencer Gulf, averages 1,300 feet in elevation. The Murray, which has its rise in the Australian Alps, pursues the lower part of its course in this colony, and is the only navigable river. Small streams are however, numerous, and the country is, on the whole, well watered. Principal lakes—Torrens, Alexandrina, and Albert. Ponds and creeks are numerous, and a series of lagoons border the coast along Encounter Bay, in the S.E. The settled portions of the colony are situated on the E. side of St Vincent Gulf, between that inlet and the Murray, and in the S.E. between Revell Bay, eastward, and the frontiers of Victoria. Climate healthy. The colony was established in 1836. Its progress has been remarkable. The population in 1847 was 31,153; 1857, 108,917. The sexes are nearly equal. Mortality, 1,304. The staple products of the colony are cereals, minerals, and wool. The quantity of enclosed land is 787,603 acres. The returns of stock in 1857 are as follow: Sheep, 1,637,003; lambs, 418,900; total, 2,055,903. Cattle, 310,400; horses, 28,330; goats, 1,647; pigs, 68,199. The quantity of land sold by the Government, from the commencement of the colony up to the end of 1857, was 1,567,740 acres. The lands are put up at auction, generally in 80 acre sections, at the upset price of 11 per acre. The local legislature is invested with control over the land fund. It is rich in mineral resources. In 1857, there were 56 mines worked in the colony, or ready for working. The quantity of ore mined during the year ending March 1857, was 10,461 tons. Coal is scarce. Iron is abundant. The wool export for 1857 was 354,390. In 1857, imports 1,693,032; exports 1,744,180. In 1857, revenue 735,536; expenditure 884,868. The following are the principal lines of railway:—A line of about 7 m. connecting the city of Adelaide with Port Adelaide. 2. A line connecting Adelaide with Gawler-town, 26 m. long. The electric telegraph is in operation between Adelaide, the Port, the Goolwa, and Gawler-town; and the capital of South Australia. An important trade has sprung up on the river Murray, which is navigable from the Goolwa, near Encounter Bay, to Albury, a distance of nearly 2,000 m. The climate and soil of South Australia are admirably suited for the cultivation of the vine, of which 1,055 ac. were under cultivation in 1857. Excellent wines have been produced, and promise to become a source of great trade. The quantity of wine made in 1857 is computed at 99,378 galls.—value 25,000.—of which 1,810 galls. were exported. Many fine fruits come to perfection; as also tobacco, hops, and indigo. Sarsaparilla, sassafras, and other drugs, are indigenous. Vegetables are plentiful. Gold has not been discovered in any great quantity in this colony. The Echunga diggings, on the Onkaparinga, have never employed more than 200 diggers, and lately they have been virtually abandoned. In 1857 manufactures and trade brisk. In the same year the income of the post-office was 10,353*l*. 18*s*. 4*d*., and the expenses 17,984*l*. 18*s*. The number of places of worship was 233, adapted to accommodate 44,898 persons. The colony, while increasing in population, wealth, and intelligence, is decreasing in crime. The government is vested in a governor; an executive council of the heads of departments, having ministerial responsibility; a legislative council, consisting of 18 members; and a house of assembly of 36 members. Both chambers are elective, but by different constituencies and with different terms. The constitution embraces triennial parliaments, universal suffrage, and vote by ballot. The chief settlements of the colony are Adelaide, Port Adelaide, Port Gawler, Albert-town, Gawler-town, Port Wakefield, Port Augusta, Goolwa, Port Elliott, Port Lincoln, Mount Barker, Strathalbyn, German-town, Macclennanfield, Kapunda, and Kooringa.

Europe, occupying the greater part of the Iberian peninsula, extending between lat. 36° 1' and 43° 45' N., lon. 3° 20' E., and 9° 21' W., bounded N. by the Bay of Biscay and by the Pyrenées, which separate it from France E., and S. by the Mediterranean and the Strait of Gibraltar, and W. by Portugal & the Atlantic Ocean. P. (1857) 807,753. Cap. Madrid. The principal islands are the Balears or Balearic Islands in the Mediterranean; off the coasts are the island of Leon, some islets in the Bay of Vigo, and others at the mouth of the Ebro. The surface of the peninsula is more diversified than that of any other country of equal extent in Europe; its interior forms a vast elevated table-land, which in the plateau of Castile has a mean elevation of 2,300 feet. This plateau occupies almost one-half of the superficies, and is nearly surrounded by mountains. The country is traversed in a direction from E. to W. by five principal chains of mountains, called in Spanish Sierras. These are (from N. to S.)—I. the Pyrenées extending from Cape Creux on the E. to the Bay of Bucay on the W., culminating point Pic Nethou, 11,171 feet; and their W. continuation, the Asturian and Cantabrian mountains, some of which rise to 10,000 feet.—II. the chain which separates the basins of the Douro and Tagus, the Sierras Gadarana, Gredos and Gata. Highest point in the Sierra Gredos 10,500 feet.—III. the mountains of Taledo, Sierra Guadalupe, and Sierra Mames, between the Tagus and Guadiana.—IV. the Sierra Morena, separating the basins of the Guadiana and Guadalquivir, and connected W. ward with the Serra Monchique in Portugal.—V. Sierra Nevada, extending from Cartagena to Cadiz, and containing the Cerro Mulhacén, next to Pic Nethou, the highest point of the peninsula, 11,181

Spain is rich in minerals, especially mercury, iron, copper, and lead. The celebrated gold and silver mines of the time of the Romans have long been abandoned, but mercury is extracted in great abundance from the mines of Almadén. Lead forms an important branch of mining industry. Coal is found chiefly in the Asturias, the richest coal-field occurring on the E. of the mountains overlying the Devonian strata, copper, tin, zinc, antimony, arsenic, and cobalt, are common, and rock salt is abundant in the hills of Cardena. The principal rivers of Spain are from N. to S., the Tago, Lobregat, Ebro, Guadalquivir, Júcar, and Segura, flowing E. to the Mediterranean. The Minho, Douro, Tago, Guadiana, and Guadalquivir, flowing mostly through Portugal W. and S. to the Atlantic. The N. slope has only the Salón, the Bidasoa, and some mountain streams. The chief tributaries are the Esla and the Pisuerga, which join the Douro; the Manzanares, which passes Madrid, and joins the Jarama, an affluent of the Tago. The Aragon, Gállego, and Segura, affluents of the Ebro, and the Guadalquivir, affluent of the Guadalquivir. Few of these are navigable, and those only for small boats near their mouths. The only lakes or lagoons of Spain are the Albufera in Valencia, and the Mar Mayor in Murcia. The coasts of Spain, which have an extent of 1,800 m., are in general little indented, except in the N. W. The chief capes are Finis terræ on the N. W., and Trafalgar on the S. W., in the Atlantic; Gibraltar, Gata, Palos, and Creus, in the Mediterranean; Peñas and Ortigal, in the Bay of Biscay. The climate of Spain varies exceedingly with elevation and position; it is warm on the coasts; the table-lands are exposed to great heat in summer, and extreme cold in winter. Many of the mountains rise above the snow line, the limit of which, in the Pyrenees, is 9,953 feet; in the Sierra Nevada, 11,190 feet. Mean annual temperature at Madrid 66° 2, Fahr. The annual fall of rain on the Sierra Nevada, and on the N. and W. coasts, is 25 to 35 inches, while on the table-land of Castile it is only 10 inches, and the capital is often exposed to severe drought. Winter is the rainy season. The most noxious winds are the solano (the aracco of Italy), a hot wind from the S., and the gallego, a cold wind from the mountains of Galicia. Frost is often severe during the night in winter. Earthquakes are sometimes felt in the south. The soil is generally fertile, except in the elevated and arid districts of the central provs.; the chief crops are wheat, maize, barley, rice, hemp, and flax. The amount of corn is often insufficient for home consumption. The wines of Spain are highly valued; the principal growths are those of Xerez (sherry), Rota, Malaga, Alicante, Malirasia, and Val de Peñas; the other products are soda (from marine plants), honey, wax, and silk, the latter very abundant in the S E provs. In the S. provs. the sugar cane and cotton have been acclimatized, and there the orange and citron grow in great abundance. The best building timber grows in the N. coast; the cork tree, the kermes oak, and the samach tree, yield valuable products. The horses of Andalusia are celebrated; the mules and asses are remarkable for beauty and size. Cattle are of good breeds. The race of sheep, called the merino, yields a great quantity of excellent wool; their exportation has always been prohibited, their pasturage is regulated by ancient laws, and their number is reckoned at 5,000,000 or 6,000,000. Goats are very abundant in the table-lands; the chamois is found in the Pyrenees; and the bear, wolf, wild cat, marten, and lynx, in the different mountains. Fish is not plentiful in the rivers, but abundant on the Atlantic coasts. Its manufacturing industry, formerly flourishing, has greatly declined; the government has still manufactures of saltpetre, gunpowder, cannon, and flintarms, tobacco, porcelain, and glass, but they are mostly in decay; and the celebrated manufacture of swords at Toledo is nearly extinguished. The other manufactures are of silks, cottons, woollens, and leather. Cutlery, iron, and copper goods, are made chiefly in Biscay. There are no good public roads in Spain, except those around Madrid; wheel carriages are little used, and much of the transport is effected by means of mules. There are several canals, many of them on a magnificent scale, but mostly unfinished and unfit for navigation; the chief of these are the Imperial Canal, commenced by Charles v., extending along the right bank of the Ebro; the canals of Castile, Manzanares, Murcia, Alacete, and Guadamarra. The only railways in operation are from Mataro to Barcelona, from Madrid to Aranjuez, and from Valencia to Alcala. Others are projected from Madrid to the frontiers of France and Portugal, and from Santander to Alar del Rey, at the commencement of the Canal of Castile. From the extent of its coast line, its numerous ports, its geographical position and natural products, Spain possesses greater commercial advantages than any other country in Europe, but smuggling is so extensively carried on as to render it impossible to estimate the amount of its foreign commerce; the principal exports are wool, wine, brandy, oil, fruits, iron, lead, mercury, and salt, with a small amount of silk and manufactured goods. Imports colonial goods, dried fish, and salted provisions, butter, cheese, rice, cotton and woollen goods, cutlery, glass, and building timber.

The present inhabitants of Spain are descendants of the ancient Iberians, or of other races who colonised it at different periods. Four primitive families are discernible—I. the Spaniards, descendants of the original races, and of Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Goths, and Alans, comprising 19-20ths of the population.—II. the Basques 1-24th.—III. the Moors, descendants of the conquerors who ruled for seven centuries in the S. of the peninsula, 1-200th.—IV. the Gitanos, or gypsies, 1-250th. The Jewish race has disappeared from Spain since the expulsion of the Jews in 1492.

The government, since 1833, is a constitutional representative monarchy; the religion exclusively Roman Catholic. In 1851 there were 10 universities, 10 normal schools of the first class, 23 elementary normal schools supported by government, besides other public schools, with a total of 839,182 pupils, or about 1 in 16 of the pop. Army (1858) 200,000 men. Navy, 3 ships of the line of 86 guns; 4 frigates, & several small vessels, in all 82, of which 37 are steamers, carrying in all 887 guns. Public revenue (1854) 1,471,147,804 reals; expenditure, 1,474,202,522 reals; national debt (1851) 13,904,358,565 reals. The peninsula, now forming the kingdoms of Spain and Portugal, was first visited by the Phœnicians, and afterwards by the Carthaginians, who here formed several establishments. It was conquered by the Romans after a resistance of two centuries; they divided it into three great provinces, viz., Taracensis in the E. N., and centre, Bætica in the S., and Lusitania in the W. The Visigoths overran the country in the 6th century, and were driven from most of it by the Arabs in 711. The kingdom of Portugal was founded in 1095. During 8 centuries the Christian princes were engaged in continual warfare with the Mohammedans. From this state the country was delivered under Ferdinand and Isabella, by the conquest of Granada, in 1492. This was followed by the pillage and expulsion of the Jews, who had possessed themselves of most of the commercial riches of the country. In the same year Columbus discovered the new world, and Spain became mistress of the greater part of America as then known. Of these vast colonial possessions, Spain has now only the islands of Cuba, Puerto Rico, and part of the Virgin Islands, in the West Indies; the Philippine, Marianne, and Caroline Islands, and the Island Palao, in the Pacific; the Canary Islands, in the Atlantic; and the island of Annabon, in the Gulf of Guinea; and Ceuta, Gomera, and part of Melilla, places used for the transportation of convicts, in Barbary: the pop. of which, added to that of Spain proper, raises the gross amount to 18,064,000. From the 16th century, Spain was divided into large provinces, having nearly the title of kingdom, but by a royal decree of April 1833 it was partitioned into 49 smaller provinces, each bearing the name of its cap., except Navarra and the three Basque provinces, which remains unchanged, and possess peculiar privileges. Napoleon I. attempted to place his brother on the throne of Spain, but he was driven out of the peninsula chiefly by the British army under Wellington. Since then there have been repeated civil wars and insurrections.

Seas, between lat. 5° 40' N. and 6° S., lon. 95° 20' and 100° E., separated N.E. from the Malay peninsula by the Strait of Malacca, having E. the Java Sea and the Strait of Sunda, separating it from the island of Java, and on other sides the Indian Ocean. Length, N.W. to S.E., 1,100 m.; breadth 60 to 240 m. Area has been estimated at from 128,000 to 130,000 sq. m.; pop. very vaguely at from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000, mostly Malays, but partly of the Papuan Negro race, with Moors in the N.W., and Dutch and other foreigners. Several mountain chains run through its interior, nearer its S.W. than N.E. coast, and rising near the equator to 14,000 or 15,000 feet in elevation. The E. half of the island is mostly level or undulating, and along the coasts there are many sandy and marshy plains traversed by the Siak, Jadrageri, Jambi, Palembang, and other rivers of large size, but which have been little explored by Europeans. Climate in the plains is less oppressive than might have been expected; at mid-day the thermometer usually ranges between 82° and 85°, sometimes rising to 88°; but at sunrise not more than 70°, Fahr. Thick fogs, thunder storms, and water spouts off the coast are frequent. Much of the island is occupied by dense forests. Products consist of rice, sago, millet, cocoa nuts, betel, sugar cane, an abundance of tropical fruits, turmeric, ginger, coffee, rattans, scented wood, teak and other timber, and the European colonists successfully cultivate the vine; but the principal articles of export are pepper to about 4,000,000 lbs. yearly, gold-dust, copper ore, sulphur, camphor, in the N.; nutmegs, cloves, and mace, in the Dutch territory of Bencoolen; and coral, benzoin, gutta serena, tin, in Palembang and Menangkabow; many of which articles are brought by natives from the interior, and bartered at the ports for Indian and European manufactured goods; tools, iron, coal of inferior quality, and naphtha, are amongst the mineral products. Buffalo are the most important live stock; the breed of horses is small but hardy, swine, and goats are both domestic and wild; the elephant, rhinoceros, tiger, bear, deer, etc., roam in the forests, and the hippopotamus and crocodile are met with in the rivers. The inhabitants build their houses on posts, and adopt other usages of ultra-Gangaic nations; they manufacture gold and silver filigree work with great skill, also silk and cotton fabrics, earthenware, arms, and domestic goods generally; from Palembang acquired basins, cane boxes, and rattan mats of the best quality are exported to Singapore, and it is said that cannon were formerly cast at Acheen in the N.W.; which territory is, however, peopled by a race of Moorish descent. Imports, besides manuf. goods already mentioned, are opium and salt from India, coarse porcelain, iron wares, gold thread from China, striped cottons, spices, krises and other weapons from Java, Celebes, and other islands of the archipelago. The island is divided amongst a number of native states, the chief being Acheen, Menangkabow in the central mountain region, Batak, Siak, Jambi, Palembang, Lampong along the E. from N. to S., mostly under the supremacy of the Dutch, who possess the settlements Bencoolen and Padang, on the west coast.
